Sawdust Useful As A Mulch

An increasing interest is being taken in certain areas in British Columbia among fruit growers and gardeners in the use of sawdust as a mulch and research work being done at the Experimental Station at Saanichton on Vancouver Island has given a marked stimulus to the use of this material in recent years.

Tests at Saanichton with loganberries show that the sawdust not only helps to conserve moisture and discourage weed growth in summer, but helps to conserve moisture and discourage weed growth in summer, but helps to prevent soil leaching and erosion during the winter rainy season. Other small fruits and certain vegetables are also being tested for their response to the sawdust mulch and some bulb-growers and gardeners in other parts of the province where sawdust is available, are beginning to show interest in this new mulching material.

Bordeaux Still Best For Blight

Of all fungicides tested for the control of late blight of potatoes, bordeaux mixture again proved the most effective in co-operative trials conducted this past summer at the Laboratory of Plant Pathology at Charlottetown P. E. I.

In those regions where the control of late blight is a major problem, experiments show that bordeaux mixture is still the best all round fungicide to use to fight this pest.

Dutch Growers Get Canadian Seed Potatoes

Canadian certified seed potato growers can expect even greater competition from Dutch growers in South American countries as a result of a recent shipment of 320 crates (about 17 1-2 tons) of Foundation Katahdin seed potatoes grown in the Maritimes and shipped from Montreal, according to a report from the Division of Plant Protection in the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

The Katahdin variety is proving popular at present with potato growers in parts of South America and in supplying good seed stock of this variety to Dutch growers, agricultural officials point out that Canadian farmers are returning the compliment extended to them over 30 years ago when Dutch bulbs were sent over to start the bulb growing industry in British Columbia and that foundation stock of new varieties is still being received from the Netherlands. Black flies in recent years are reported to have caused serious losses among beef cattle in the Prairie Provinces. Research work being done by the Canada Department of Agriculture's Division of Entomology at Saskatoon showed that the eggs of the black fly responsible are laid on the surface of the Saskatchewan River in summer and sink to the river bed. Here they eventually become buried in the sand and over winter there, hatching the following spring. Tests conducted by the Division of Entomology along the South Saskatchewan River demonstrated that control could be effected with fuel oil solutions of DDT (the dosage used is insufficient to injure fish) applied in the water when the black flies are in the larval stages. In this was only a small percentage of adults ever emerge and neighboring stock are thus protected from their ravages.

Active Market For Feeder Cattle

Representing a 16 per cent increase over the same period last year, up to about the end of November there was a recorded movement of more than 176 thousand stocker and feeder cattle being moved to feed lots in Canada, according to a report from the Canada Department of Agriculture's Marketing Service at Ottawa. This figure does not include feeders and stockers that are not marketed at stockyards and packing plants, or do not move directly by rail from points in Western Canada to points in Eastern Canada. Keen demand from buyers in the United States has helped to maintain a strong market for feeder cattle and prices are reported to be up 40 per cent over 1949.
