

have been so brilliant, and have been such as to prepare the public mind for that consummation so devoutly wished for—the banishment of the Russians from the Crimea...

"On the 24th of September I was joined on the Leona by two companies of volunteers under Capt. Wm. R. Henry, of San Antonio, and Nat. Benton, of Seguin, and proceeded by regular marches from that place after the Indians arrived on the 29th of September on the Rio Grande at the mouth of the Los Moros."

Here he found it was next to impossible to follow the Indians further, on account of the high water in the Rio Grande. He waited a few days for the water to subside, to no purpose, and then marched to Eagle Pass, with a view to cross the river at that point, and proceed directly to the camp of the Indians, situated about 35 miles west of the river, near the city of San Fernando.

At Eagle Pass he received from the Alcalde of Piedras Negras, opposite that town, and from the citizens of the Rio Grande generally, the warmest assurances of assistance by men and means to effect his object.

On the 2d inst. he crossed the river, and on the 3d marched toward the Indian encampment, at the head of 111 Rangers and volunteers. Capt. Callahan proceeds as follows: At noon we encamped on a small stream 10 miles west of the Rio Grande, where we refreshed ourselves and horses. Up to this time the Mexican authorities and citizens had shown us much kindness, and evinced their good wishes as to the success of the expedition, and many even volunteered to enlist under me, but none were received.

After nooning it an hour or two, we marched on towards San Fernando, beyond which were the Indian camps. Having proceeded some ten miles along the highway to the city over a widely extended prairie, about three in the afternoon, while marching leisurely along, we descried three horsemen approaching us from a mot of timber about a mile to the northward. At first, these men were not noticed: we supposed them to be Mexican herdsmen—but on their approaching within 200 yards of us, we discovered them to be Indian chieftains, ready dressed and painted for battle: and they were evidently trying to decoy us from our position.

Forming my men in a line along the road, I waited for the enemy to begin the battle—for by this time large numbers of them had emerged from the timber, seemingly with the intention of attacking us; they soon spread out in front of us, and to our right and left, to the amount of several hundred horsemen, and commenced to fire on us. About this time one of my men fired on a chief, about 200 yards distant and broke a leg of his horse. Perceiving that the enemy, composed of both Indians and Mexicans, were trying to outflank us, I ordered my men to charge, which was executed in fine style, and 30 of the enemy were slain.

Whilst making our charge, the left flank of the enemy which extended for near half a mile, came in our rear and opened on us a very severe fire, during which four of our gallant men were killed. The front and right flank on which we charged, after a galling fire, fled before us, leaving us in possession of the position which it was our object and determination to gain. Then we discovered that our enemy numbered six or seven hundred, as all their footmen were concealed in the timber, and had not advanced in view of the prairie.

My men formed in a strong position beneath the bank of a small creek on which the enemy had been encamped, and their whole force coming up against us, we continued the battle for about three hours, when they fled in the direction of San Fernando, leaving, as we heard this evening, some 85 killed, and with the loss of 100 wounded. This we learn from some Mexicans who were engaged in the battle, and from other sources since my report to his Excellency the Hon. E. M. Pease.

The same Mexicans have also informed me that the actual number of our enemy was 750 men. After the retreat of the enemy, which was about dark, we, supposing they would come on us again before day with large reinforcements, fell back to the Rio Grande, where we would be safe from any number of men and any quantity of artillery they might bring against us.

Approaching the town of Piedras Negras about sunrise, we took possession of it, and now occupy a position opposite Eagle Pass, on the west bank of the Rio Grande.
