Firms Seen Uncertain On Executive Material

By FORBES RHUDE
Canadian Press Business Editor

Business apparently isn't quite sure what kind of people it should hire as future executive material, and swings rather uncertainly between general and specialist training.

R. H. Keefler of Montreal, speaking at this week's annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, commented:

"In spite of all the personnel interviewing techniques we have developed, I sometimes wonder if business really knows what qualities it wants—or, if it does, can it recognize these qualities? People have a habit of unintentionally concealing their good qualities about as often as they intentionally conceal their weaknesses."

Mr. Keefler, who is president of Northern Electric Co. Ltd., said that in practice business tends to seek specialists, because it knows how to use specialists in the early years of employment.

Later on, it frequently finds itself in the position of having to select managers from men who were originally hired as specialists, but in whom it now is seeking traits associated with a much broader background.

SEND SPECIALISTS BACK

"One of the results," Mr. Keefler continued, "is that universities are asking business why it hesitates to hire liberal arts and business administration graduates, but insists on sending men back to university for broadening courses in these subjects later on in their careers."

Mr. Keefler was one of several speakers on management, human relations and associated subjects.

Leo Teplow, assistant vice-president, American Iron and Steel Institute, New York, illustrated the difficulties of arriving at conclusions through surveys.

A research project in the 1920s tried to determine what level of lighting would produce the best results in a certain operation employing girls. The result:

When light intensity was increased, production went up. But it also rose in the control group in which light intensity was unchanged. Later, when light intensity was decreased, production again went up; and it continued to rise so long as the girls involved could make out the work they were engaged in.

ROSE IN BOTH

Production also continued to rise in the control group in which lighting was not changed.

As a purely physical experiment, Mr. Teplow commented, it was a failure, and the researchers never did find out what was the best level of lighting.

"But," he added, "they did discover something of far greater importance. The reason production went up was that the girls knew that management at all levels was very much concerned about them. They felt they had become important. And they responded by demonstrating how well they could produce."

Mr. Teplow said some of the lessons of this early research haven't yet been completely digested. He said sometimes success of a certain technique in winning employee participation leads to the technique itself being regarded as a panacea, "when actually it was the existence of a philosophy of employee participation — regardless of the mechanism used—that was responsible for improvement."

ADVICE GIVEN AT CMA MEETING

Teamwork Is Suggested For Overseas Projects

By FORBES RHUDE
Canadian Press Business Editor

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian companies should avoid excessive competition with one another in seeking foreign industrial projects, H. B. Style, president of John Inglis Co. Ltd., said here at the annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

"Competition for this kind of business," Mr. Style stated, "is international and there are enough potential foreign projects to keep us all in Canada busy if we bring them to fruition.

"It would, therefore, be a pity if Canadian industry and Canadian consulting engineers waste time, effort and money in competing among themselves for the same project in an already highly competitive market.

"This calls for some degree of understanding between Canadian manufacturers, consulting engineers and the Export Credits Insurance Corporation as to the projects each Canadian group is pursuing to avoid unnecessary duplication and wasted effort."

In reply to a question, Mr. Style said he would get together with competitors for purposes of export, without fear of combines legislation, which, so far as he knows, makes no prohibition against that kind of cooperation.

Mr. Style own firm, based in Toronto and a subsidiary of English Electric Company of England, has booked export orders of about $27,500,000 in the last three years, much of it in heavy electrical and mechanical equipment.

The two-day program of the manufacturers' annual meeting ended Tuesday night.

ELECTED PRESIDENT

Earlier, H. Roy Crabtree of Montreal was elected president for the coming year; A. A. Cumming, Toronto, first vice-president; and Mr. Style second vice-president.

Rail, truck and shipping industries were heard from in a transportation session.

A. H. Hart, vice-president, Canadian National Railways, outlining new developments in rail services, commented:

"We now will move an automobile and a group of up to six persons from Montreal or Toronto to Winnipeg or Edmonton or Vancouver, and return, through a very reasonable package deal that includes sleeping accommodation, meals and tips for each of the passengers. We expect great things from this and other innovations now in operation or being developed."

John Magee, executive secretary, Canadian Trucking Associations, said "the time is long overdue for Parliament to be astir itself on its discrimination in regard to highway transport.

"If Parliament wiped out all freight subsidies, that would be the end of the problem, so far as we are concerned."

F. D. McCaffrey, Montreal shipping executive, reviewing changes in sea transportation, commented:

"We have seen only the beginning of automation in the engine rooms. In recent vessels built in Japan engines are controlled directly from the bridge and the entire engine room is run from a centralized control centre which can be maintained and operated by a single engineer."

AP Planning Experimental Transmission

NEW YORK (AP)—The Associated Press is planning to participate June 10 in an experimental transmission of a news story from London to the United States for almost instantaneous typesetting by newspapers in the U.S.

The story will be dispatched from London by teletype and relayed to the United States by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's satellite Relay I. It the will be flashed through an RCA 301 computer at Camden, N.J., and converted to automatic typesetting signals. The computer will set margins to fit newspaper column widths and style the story in capital and small letters.

The signals then will be relayed instantly to Chicago and fed into AP's nationwide automatic typesetting 5 circuits to read hundreds of AP member newspapers.

Newspapers on these circuits receive stories on a printed copy and also a perforated tape. This tape, fed into linecasting machines, automatically sets the stories into type.

The experiment will include transmission of stories for automatic typesetting both ways between the United States and Europe, as well as from South America.

Scientific Crop Planning Suggested At CMA Meeting

By HAROLD MORRISON

WASHINGTON (CP) — President Kennedy told the world's hungry here that scientists now have found the means of producing enough food for all mankind.

But the international will to carve this scientific revolution into a weapon to end all starvation is still lacking, he said.

"We have the means and we have the capacity to eliminate hunger from the face of the earth," he told more than 1,000 delegates at the opening of the two-week World Food Congress. "We need only the will.

"The key to a permanent solution to world hunger is the marriage of technology to food deficit nations — and that task, second to none in importance, is one of the basic reasons for this congress."

The conference, drawing representatives from most parts of the world with the exception of the Soviet Union and Red China, opened on a solemn note as Dr. B. R. Sen, director - general of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization, called for a minute of silence in homage to Pope John XXIII.

ASKS CANADA'S HELP

While Kennedy spoke of the technical ability to end starvation, U Thant, UN secretary-general, suggested the more advanced countries — and these could include the U.S. and Canada — might provide more relief by increasing contributions of surplus food to the undernourished.

The time has come, he said, to redefine what is surplus. Farm surpluses could be the greatest benefit to mankind. Within certain limits they could be translated from economic liabilities to social assets.

President Radhakrishnan of India agreed with Kennedy that science has brought a solution to hunger within the reach of mankind. But the problem of finance remained. The underdeveloped countries would require more help to pay for better seed, better fertilizer and better irrigation.

The congress would more than meet its objectives if it could stimulate self-help among the poorer nations and more cooperation from the wealthier ones.

"Peace and stability can never be maintained in this world if more than half of its population have to remain hungry throughout the year," he said.
