Priestley's Dress Fabrics

In the long run it is the quality of the material that will determine the success of a lady's costume. Every lady who has at all studied the matter knows this. Priestley's Black Dress Goods are the best that the market affords. That is conceded on all hands. The ladies of Great Britain cordially acknowledge it. The American ladies prefer Priestley's dress fabrics to French. Our Canadian ladies are now asking for them. They wear better than other goods; but their great charm consists in a peculiar richness and softness of appearance, and a flexibility which enables them to drape in the costume with that suggestion of flow and rhythm which it is the dream of all tasteful women to realise.

GREAT GAME PLENTY.

A TALL HUNTING STORY OF THE GOOD OLD DAYS.

A Deer, a Panther and Three Bears Bagged in One Shot—A Deer Played One Bear Against the Panther—Both Died—The Hunter Shot the Deer.

"Game was plentiful in those days," said the old hunter. "One day I was still-hunting around the headwaters of Cowley Run. The fact of the matter is I had to still-hunt that day because Zenas Cowley had shot my two hounds. Zenas didn't believe in running deer with hounds, and he always put a ball into anybody's dog that came his way on the trail of venison. My two hounds were Russian greyhounds. The day they were killed Laroy Lyman came to me and said:

"'What'll you take for them two hounds o' your'n, Noah?'

"'You can't buy 'em for $100 apiece,' said I.

"'I didn't know,' said Laroy, 'but I seen 'em taking a deer over toward Cowley's half an hour ago, and I thought I'd ask you.'

"'In that case,' said I, 'you can buy them hounds for four shillin'!'

"And he could, too, for I knew they'd never come back if they had been so forgetful as to take a deer over toward Cowley's. But there isn't any doubt that is just what they did, for I never saw 'em again. And they were the best dogs in Hallburton. So I was out still hunting that day.

"I sat down at the roots of a big fallen hemlock to wait and see what would come my way. I hadn't waited long before I saw a big she bear and two cubs come slouching up out of the hollow and tumble into a clump of bushes not more than twenty rods from where I sat. I was getting ready to send a bullet into the old bear when I saw a deer break out of the woods and come bounding along the open side hill opposite me. Only a few jumps behind it came a big panther, hot on the trail of the deer, and as the panther was clearing more than thirty feet feet at every jump I saw that it wouldn't be a very long chase before he had his claws on that deer.

"The course the deer was taking brought her—it was a doe—along above the bushes where the bear and her cubs were lying. I saw at once that the deer either saw or smelt the bears from the way she kind o' swerved as she went past the bush. Now, there isn't anything a panther likes more than bear cubs, and there is the deadliest enmity between bears and panthers just on that account. The old she bear smelt the panther and got to her feet just as he was bounding by. The panther was evidently too intent on the deer to either hear or see the threatening bear. Of course this all took place in a few seconds, and before I made up my mind just exactly what tactics to adopt to get the most benefit out of the situation. I hadn't fully resolved yet, when, to my surprise I saw the deer wheel like a flash, leap clear over her savage pursuer, and take her back track. The panther took up the chase with renewed fury, and gained rapidly on the deer. I was on the point of stopping him with a rifle ball, when I saw by the action of the deer that she had discovered the bears in the bushes, and it struck me that she had a scheme.

"'There's going to be some fun here,' thought I, and I lowered my rifle.

"With the passing of the panther the first time the old bear, seeing that her cubs were not the object of the panther's quest, had returned to the bushes and lain down with her cubs again. The second time he went by she got up again and stood ready to tackle him if necessary, but the panther shot by without noticing the bear. The deer bounded on and into the woods. In less than a minute she came out again, with the panther dangerously close. This time the deer was headed straight for the bushes where the bear and her cubs were, and she slackened her pace.

"'Aha!' said I. 'Smart deer! She's going to turn that panther over to the bear!'

"When she reached the bush she leaped over it, and the panther was only one easy spring behind her. He crouched to make it, but he didn't, for right in front of him out of the bushes rose the gigantic front of this savage she bear. The suddenness of the change in the situation seemed to surprise the panther, but not for long. He was out for blood, and if he couldn't get deer blood he would take his chances with bear. He lashed his long tail nervously on the ground for a second or two and then launched his big body straight at the bear. His claws were in the bear's shoulders and his red jaws at her throat the next instant. But the huge bear folded the panther in her terrible embrace and put all her strength in the hug. I could hear the panther's bones crack, and both bear and panther fell to the ground dead. As I discovered later the panther's fangs had severed the bear's jugular vein and windpipe both.

The deer took but two leaps after bringing the panther face to face with the bear. Then she stopped and became an excited spectator of the result of her stratagy. When the bear and the panther came together her eyes blazed, she shook her head high in the air, stamped her feet, and relieved her feelings by resounding snorts. She seemed to take fiendish enjoyment in the sight of her deadly foe in the toils of the equally savage bear. When the two combatants fell to the ground and rose no more the deer approached them cautiously, sniffing and snorting and stopping every few steps to stamp her feet on the ground. At last she came to where the two big beasts lay dead together. She sniffed at the carcasses. The hair on her neck stood erect, and she showed the fury she felt by rising on her hind feet and striking with her sharp forefeet the body of the panther. I wanted that panther's skin and knew that the deer would soon rip it into worthlessness with her hoofs, so I shot her where I stood. She never knew what hurt her. I was always sorry that her vindictiveness against the panther forced me to kill her, for she played a smart trick on him to save her life, and she ought to have had it. I captured the two bear cubs alive. And that is the way I bagged all that game with only one shot."

Wigwams Classed as Improvements.

The land office has just rendered an important decision, and one entirely without precedent. The land laws require that a settler taking up government land must make improvements thereon, and in the case in question a Sac and Fox Indian, who had become a citizen and settled upon government land, was contested on the ground of not having made proper improvements. But the office holds that as he had erected a wigwam upon the land and that being all the improvement he considered necessary for comfortable living, he was entitled to the land.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Shall I Trust It?

Will It Meet My Expectation?

The Answer of Thousands is: "It Has Cured Us and Will Cure You."

Paine's Celery Compound Never Fails.

Testimony of a Well-known Mechanical Engineer.

Shall I trust Paine's Celery Compound? Will it meet fully my expectation, and give to me the health and vigor for which I have so earnestly sought.

These questions are asked occasionally by wearied, overworked, nervous sleepless and dyspeptic men and women, who have met failures and disappointments after using the common patent medicines of our times.

We admit that repeated failures have a tendency to weaken and destroy faith; we sincerely sympathize with those who have been duped in the past by worthless nostrums. The dissappointed ones have not only lost their money, but they have been cast deeper into the mire of disease and suffering.

All doubts and fears as to the efficacy and powers of Paine's Celery Compound should at once be banished from the mind. The strong testimonials of prominent and well-known Canadians received in the past and coming in every day, are the best and strongest proofs of the value of the great medicine. When trustworthy friends and neighbors are cured, and you know it, what further evidence is wanted? Surely the medicine that has cured those who were given up by physicians will meet your case, reader. Paine's Celery Compound is a guaranteed cure and never fails.

Read the testimony of Mr. C. E. Robertson, Government Steamboat Inspector for Manitoba and the Northwest. Mr. Robertson says:—

"It gives me much pleasure to give you my opinion of your preparation known as Paine's Celery Compound, and how it acted on me. A little over a year ago, while coming through a very anxious time first in connection with my business as an engineer, and then by the loss of my child, as well as overwork, my nerves gave out completely; I could not sleep for weeks, and could not work through the day at such work as drawing, owing to the twitching of my nerves making me blot the work.

"A friend told me to try your Compound which I did, and I firmly believe it did more for me than any doctor could do. I am now strong, sleep well, and as steady as a rock; my whole system has been invigorated by it.

"I have recommended it to a large number of people, and find it as a rule never failed to do them good. I could give you examples of a number of cases where it has been the decided cause of restoration to health."

"I almost died when my wife eloped," said the solemn man. "She was an angel, so kind, so loving, so patient. I fairly worshipped her, and she was idolized by everyone who knew her. She was the best woman in the world."

"It seems, then," said one of his hearers, "that she was too good to be true."—Truth.

MADAME EMMA CALVÉ.

ONE OF THE BRIGHT LIGHTS OF THE OPERATIC STAGE.

The brilliant little French star whose pleasing face appears above is well known to musical people everywhere. Her wonderful success in the opera of 'Carmen' has placed her in the highest rank of artists. Speaking of 'Vin Mariani,' the great nerve and stomach tonic, she says she took it to 'cure a cold,' and it really enabled her to sing Carmen the same evening. 'Vin Mariani' (Mariani wine) nourishes and strengthens the whole system, is very palatable, never produces constipation; but, on the contrary, aids digestion and assimilation. Send stamp to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, and they will send the portraits of many celebrated people who have testified in favor of this wonderful coca tonic.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified by pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

NAPOLEON AS A CAPTIVE.

LAST DAYS OF THE FALLEN CONQUERER AT ST. HELENA.

A British Doctor Who Accompanied "The Trampler" Talks—Bonaparte's Habit of Asking Questions—Opinions of the Great Soldier.

Contributors to Napoleonic history are the fashion. The century is going out profusely placarded with annals of a creature whom Lord Wolseley, in a recent article, declares was "a superlatively bad man, dishonest and untruthful, whose career embraces some serious mistakes in national policy, whose public life ended in disastrous defeat, and who died in prison and is yet so great a man that his name fills more pages in the world's solemn history than that of any other mortal." People never tire, apparently, of reading about this Corsican who revolutionized the Europe of his day, made a new France, and from its new people secured canonization.

It is only a few months since there was published in a leading monthly of the United States the diary of the secretary of the rear admiral (Cockburn) who conveyed the conquered warrior to St. Helena. There was enough new information about the man to justify its addition to history. But there was another diary keeper on board the same ship at the same time, and eighty-seven years ago he put his reminiscences, warm from the brain, into the compass of a little book for circulation among his friends. This writer was Dr. William Warden, surgeon of the man-of-war Northumberland. From his own account thus given, he was brought into closer social relations with the exemperor than was the fortune of the admiral's secretary. In his introduction he writes: "Circumstances connected with my profession gave me frequent opportunities of conversing with him and with the principal persons of his suite.

"As to his person, Bonaparte is of small stature, but admirably proportioned," says an account of him, written in 1809. "He is of a spare habit of body, yet robust and qualified to undergo the greatest hardships and fatigues. His complexion, like that of all the males of southern climates, is olive; his chin prominent; the lower part of his face thin and his forehead square and projecting."

On the day of his transfer to his floating prison, Dr. Warden describes him as wearing the uniform of a general of the French infantry—a green coat with white facings, and with the rest of the same color. His stockings were of white silk and his feet were covered with a handsome shoe, with gold oval buckles. His face was pale and unshaved and he had an air of weariness or dejection. His forehead and the top of his head were thickly covered with hair of a dark color. The head was large and of a singular flatness. The little hair on the back of his head was bushy and without the slightest showing of gray. The eyes were gray and in continual motion, turning quickly from one object to another. His teeth were good and well shaped, his neck short, his shoulders of fair proportion, and his entire figure, though having what the doctor calls a "Dutch fullness," was handsome. Later on, when the voyage was half over and the writer had had ample time to study his subject, he adds to his picture of the emperor by saying that his face was an uncommon one, large, full and pale, but not sickly. While in conversation there was no play of the muscles of the face except those close to the mouth; and to those at a distance his face as he talked seemed fixed and the forehead, which with Frenchmen is generally wrinkled, was in Bonaparte's case perfectly smooth. However inexpressive he might be in conversation, there was no distortion of feature. Sometimes, when he became unusually earnest, he gestured with his hand, but the doctor mischeviously insinuates that such display might reasonably be attributed to "the uncommon handsomeness of the hand."

Bonaparte was, according to Warden, an inveterate questioner. From the time he put his captive feet on the quarter deck of the Northumberland until he landed at St. Helena, nearly ten weeks afterwards, he was continually making inquiries about all sorts of subjects. Nothing seemed to escape his notice, nor did he hesitate to apply for information to anyone continually at hand, from midshipman to admiral. "He seldom or never omitted an opportunity of asking a question," is the testimony of the doctor, and "he made a most unexpected inquiry of our orthodox chaplain whether he was not a Puritan. I need not tell you what would be the reply, and you may conjecture, probably what might be the feelings of a gentleman clothed in canonical orders, and firm in canonical principles, when he was saluted with such an interrogatory."

"His conversation," continues the doctor, "at all times consisted of questions which never failed to be put in such a way as to prohibit a return of them. To answer one question by another, which frequently happens in common discourse, was not admissible with him. I can conceive that he was habituated to to this kind of colloquy when he sat upon such a throne as that which supported him, and before which no one spoke but when he commanded utterance; nor does he seem disposed to lay it aside when he sits in the cabin, stands in the gangway, or patrols the deck of a ship where he is subject to the control of its commander."

The long boats evoked from the emperor so many inquiries as to suggest the idea that he thought them "part of the naval apparatus peculiarly provided to prevent his escape from the island to which he was destined." His discontent manifested itself in continual inquiries as to the rate of the progress of the vessel. And these inquiries were daily made, as if the emperor were anxious to have his exile on land begin.

Cured of a Serious Disease.

"I was suffering from what is known as Bright's disease for five years, and for days at a time I have been unable to straighten myself up. I found relief before I had finished taking half of a bottle. I got so much help from taking the first bottle that I decided to try another, and since taking the second bottle I feel as well as ever I did in my life." GEO. MERRETT, Toronto, Ont.
