STRICT ATTENTION to Business, Honesty and Square Dealing, and paying Cash every time, is what has placed to the front of all competitors, in CLOTHING, HATS, &c.

L. E. PROWSE

He does not advertize to sell goods at cost, but he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than those who do advertize to sell at cost.

He does not try to deceive the people by making a big blow and offering paltry rewards, but tries to do things right and has the goods to back him up in what he advertizes.

He has now about 6,500 HATS and $4,000 worth of CLOTHING, which he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than any house in the trade. A lot of this Clothing was bought less than half price, and will be sold less than half price.

He does not ask the people to believe his advertisement until they see his prices; he knows then they will believe, and knows that the goods and prices back him up every time.

All goods freely shown, or sent to any part of the town.

Please don't forget to call.

ABSOLUTE PURITY.

THE following analyses (made by the Dominion Analyst) of three BAKING POWDERS sold in this market should put a stop to the unjust efforts of the Royal to mislead the public as to its being the only pure Powder. These impartial tests show that other Powders are as pure and wholesome:

W. SAUNDERS, Dom. Analyst, St. John, N. B. reports:

Royal—Contains Alkaline Carbonate—a mixture consisting mainly of Bi-Carbonate of Soda and Cream of Tartar—adulterated with about 20 per cent. of Starch.

W. F. BEST, Dom. Analyst, St. John, N. B. reports:

Pure Gold—Contains Cream of Tartar, Carbonate of Soda—fresh and pure.

Nov. 19, 1882—Not adulterated; same as usual.

April 7, 1883—Not adulterated; same as usual.

June 4, 1884—Fresh and pure; same composition as usual.

MAYNARD BOWMAN, Dom. Analyst, Halifax N. S., reports:

WOODILL'S of good quality; contains nothing injurious.

Woodill's German Baking Powder held a reputation for purity and wholesomeness now nearly 30 years.

SHADOWS AND SUNSHINE.

CHAPTER XIV.

A WEARY MARCH AND AN UNPLEASANT RIDE.

"Throned in the gloom of purple Southern twilight,

It beckons me with image like these!

What is it? Oh! What thoughts are these that call me

Back to the days I shall see no more!

To the bright waters, murmuring lapsing.

By the green banks of youths' enchanted shore."—M. P. Davis.

While the wintry blasts, cold and pitiless, begin to eddy through the northern cities, let us turn once more to the south, where the storm of war is hushed for a time, as nature tempests whistle through the cedars, and pines, and magnolias, and leafless oaks of Virginia, that bloodstained American Crimea, on whose fertile fields, the most desperate struggles of the rebellion took place.

When Captain Chandley fell into the hands of the rebels at the close of the hard fought battle of Fredericksburg, he was at once conducted, with his fellow prisoners, to a ravine in the rear, where he saw upwards of fifty prisoners sitting in a circle around a fast dying camp fire, eating scanty rations of coarse army fare. Here he and his comrades were compelled to surrender their pistols and swords, and were gruffly told to join the group around the fire, and to eat if they wished, preparatory to an immediate march.

"Are we not," asked Paul, "to be allowed—"

"Ask no questions and pass no remarks, or it will be worse for you," said the heartless officer of the guard, in a tone that admitted of no parley, "I want you cursed Unionists to keep mighty still tongues in your heads while you are in my charge. Come, now, stir yourselves, and finish your supper, for it's all you'll get for the next fifteen hours. And don't let me hear a mother's son of a gun of you whispering; do you hear me, now!"

Paul, imitating the example of the others, helped himself to a hard cracker, and a tin of muddy coffee, and tried to eat. It was not so much the food that seemed to choke him, but out on the plains he could hear the music of the last cannon booming, and the last volley of musketry rolling, and could even distinguish the commands of the leaders as the battle ended, and the troops were withdrawn from the field, while night mercifully spread her sable wing over the scene. Sooner, far sooner, would he be lying slain on the gory ground, a martyr to the sacred cause of liberty and union, than this powerless and voiceless, ignorant of what the future held in store for him, or how soon he might sink unknown and uncared for in a dismal southern prison.

His bitter thoughts were interrupted by the harsh commands of the captain of the guard, and the prisoners were ordered to stand up, when their hands were tied behind their backs, and the march began. The men now tramping off to prison had been on many a long march before, but in a cause they felt bound to protect to the last, and with feelings very different from those that animated them that chill December night as they plodded on, silent and weary, bound and guarded, over hills and through valleys, past the wrecks of farm houses dimly outlined in the starlight, across tottering bridges and along rough frozen roads, now on the broad highway, now over bare fields, and again following the railway track, meeting occasionally, as the huge engine came snorting through the gloom, a train laden with supplies for the rebel army.

Shortly after daybreak, having marched more than twenty miles during the night, they came to a small station, where they were met by another detachment of about two hundred prisoners. Orders were there received to await the first train to Richmond. Ere long the train arrived, and the wretched prisoners were soon packed on the open cars, their feet tied, and the train again in motion. No wonder the poor fellows left hope behind them as they saw the hills fade one by one in the distance. They knew too well what prison life in Richmond meant.

It seemed to Paul as though the hills of life had been concentrated by a grim fury into one phial, and poured upon his devoted head. But a few short hours before, he had held an enviable position in a magnificent army, with the brightest hopes for the future. To-day, those golden hopes shattered, the angel ideal of his life transformed to the commonest clay, when all the rose-tinted visions with which she had peopled his dreams were dispelled in one rude shock, himself a prisoner in the hands of a relentless foe, bound and fettered, and rapidly nearing that horror of horrors at the very name of which every soldier shuddered, he felt that death on the battle field were far better. That would have been a glorious ending to a life such as his had become, broken and gloomy, void and ambitionless.

But the most dreary journey must come to an end, and in due time the spires of Richmond rose to view, and soon the prisoners were once more on their feet, swinging and stretching their numbed and tired arms to restore the circulation, while an officer took down their names and those of the regiments to which they belonged, and told them off in squads according to their rank.

Forest fires are raging fiercely in several parts of Michigan and Wisconsin, destroying an immense quantity of valuable timber and other property. Yesterday afternoon the entire hamlet of Romeo, Wis., was destroyed, entailing a loss of $150,000.
