Strange Reaction

The defeat of a second motion to adjourn the flag debate in the House of Commons yesterday pretty well disposes of the contention that a Conservative filibuster is responsible for keeping this wretched controversy going.

Bread Upon The Waters

Measured in terms of human values, there is no doubt that the Marshall plan which emerged after the last world war represented a high-water mark in American ingenuity and magnanimity.

A striking example of this is afforded by a series of full page advertisements now appearing in many national American publications.

The German objective, as expressed by Chancellor Ludwig Erhard, is as follows: "The quicker and more thoroughly we manage to help the people in the developing countries to attain a reasonable degree of prosperity and of social security and freedom, the more they will be interested in the human values which we profess and uphold."

Better Than "Burying" Us

Here's wishing Soviet Premier Khrushchev every luck in his latest scheme for speeding up Soviet production methods. It's not going to endanger the free world in any way, and since imitation is the sincerest form of flattery it could be called a praiseworthy gesture in our direction.

In Kula Lumpur last week Hon. Mitchell Sharp told the Commonwealth finance ministers' conference that he believed world trade would continue to expand in the coming year.

EDITORIAL NOTE

One of the most unusual aspects of the current U.S. election campaign is that party disunity is greater among the Republicans than among the Democrats who are in power.

These restraints were not "voluntary." They were the result of pressure brought to bear on the Japanese to limit their exports of certain items which, it claimed, could harm "sensitive segments" in the Canadian economy.

As pointed out in these columns the other day, Canada sells much more to Japan each year than we buy from that country—and the imbalance gets larger every year.

Our fathers enjoyed the "barbarous excess" of Mariposa, officially named Ojila, paraded by the witty professor of political economy at McGill University.

Glimmer In Vietnam

There is just one sign out of Saigon that might be a good omen for the Vietnamese who are saving themselves in this latest crisis, despite the apparent blunders of the United States.

FISHING ON EACH OTHER'S SIDE

OTTAWA REPORT by Patrick Nicholson

Writes Vivid Piece Of Canadiana

The Jekyll and Hyde of literature always offers an interesting contrast. There was for instance that innovator of science fiction, H. G. Wells, whose charming "Alice in Wonderland" is so enchanted a Queen Victoria that she asked him to dedicate his next book to her.
