FOR HIS DEAR SAKE.

Near the Parc Montcau is a pretty little house that seems to hide in a bush of clematis the home of a young girl of 22—the Countess of Viry. She had as a pet and constant companion a delicate little poodle, all white and woolly, to which, was given as its sole nourishment a lump of sugar in the morning and a sweet biscuit at night. His name was Nito M. de Beauchamp.

"What can I do, dear?" replied Louise. "I am gay, it is true, but that is a crime. And why should I be cold to those who approach me only to say pleasant things?"

"You are coquette, and your laugh makes me despair, because if you laugh thus against my wish it must be only to show your teeth! You know very well how adorable you are when in laughing with a fixed purpose you throw back your head and show your pretty neck."

"But what must I do to prove my love for you? It is becoming desperate. Ask of me what you please, but do not ask me not to laugh any more. I am only happy when I am light-hearted, and I will not be otherwise."

"Well, then, make me the sacrifice of one tooth!" "What are you demanding of me? It is barbarous!" "Only a tooth; the smallest one in the front. And afterwards you may laugh as much as you please."

"I swear to you there is no other way to assure my happiness." "Well—anything, Jacques, for your dear sake!"

"The Countess rang the bell. John, her valet, took her orders, and came back a quarter of an hour later with a man carrying in his hand a leather case such as is used by dentists."

"Who is that person?" asked M. de Beauchamp. "It is M. James, the dentist."

"The little Countess entered her boudoir, followed by Nito, his tail between his legs, as if he understood that something serious was about to happen. Louise returned soon afterwards, shamed and humbled, and gave to M. de Beauchamp a little tooth as white as milk, which he carried to his lips and covered with kisses."

"Poor Countess!" said some evil-minded ones; "how altered she is! Every day she looks older!"

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement, and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 7c. bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

THE ALPINE CHASSEURS

A PICTURESQUE CORPS TRAINED FOR MOUNTAIN FIGHTING. A Training Peculiarly their Own Endeavour—Book Rules at a Discount—A Heroic Service That Has a Picturesque Abandon About It.

There is scarcely a body of troops in any army whose duties are more striking to the imagination than the French chasseurs, who guard the long line of the Alps. His cap hanging lightly over his ear, his rifle strapped across his knapsack, his open tunic showing his bare neck, his waist encircled by his white blue sash, and his muscular calves swathed in the woollen bands, the Alpine chasseur, careless of the weight of his heavy marching equipments, picks his way easily along the rocky cliff, leading boldly over the rock from which the iron of his alpenstock strikes out sparks, and gazes far down into the ravines with the deep eyes of a mountaineer.

The Alpine Chasseur undergoes a training all his own. The first thing taught to the young recruit or to the young officer fresh from the academy is that his new life demands of him special obligations. The youth's morale must be carefully cultivated, for it is in constant danger of vertigo, slips and false steps; all traces of timidity must be eradicated. As for fall, there are numerous mortal accidents every year. A stone turns beneath the foot, a crevasse opens in the snow, a peg rolls across the precipice, against such catastrophes there is no guarding. It is so with the landlides, which happen in every season of the year from the rains. Three years ago in the valley of the Tine three chateaux of the rear guard of the Twenty-third Battalion were thus swept away, their companions escaping to be a few seconds. And the avalanche! Truly it is a life of constant peril.

There are no book rules for the special tactics of marches and conflicts, but a body of tradition based on the experience of past wars and the annual maneuvers is the guide. These are early taught to the chasseur and he is made free of a valuable lesson, that the sun, the stars and a pocketful of compass are of use as early as to him; what he needs to know is the lay of the land and the trend of the mountains and valleys and ranges.

The chasseur leaves winter quarters at the beginning of summer for three months, campaigning in the mountains. That is the time to see them at their best—gay, alert, and enduring, marching night and day over terrible roads, drenched with rain or with perspiration, heavily laden, but always keeping the unalterable gaiety of the French soldier, and what lessons the years during which he has learned the tricks that the mountains have in store for you. You hear an infernal fusillade, a fearful thunder, a roll of musketry close beside you surely the attack is being made just there, around that point of rocks. The point of rocks is formed, when suddenly the noise dies down and heard far behind you. It was an echo, and the battle is raging in the rear. And now again, what is that gentle murmur that whispers among the branches, a distant rolling sound, whose muffled hum may be the time to see them at their best—gay, alert, and enduring, marching night and day over terrible roads, drenched with rain or with perspiration, heavily laden, but always keeping the unalterable gaiety of the French soldier, and what lessons the years during which he has learned the tricks that the mountains have in store for you.

And what difficult fighting it is! The battalion comes on in Indian file and spreads out in open order among the rocks, firing as it advances in broken, irregular front. All at once the enemy appears in force. A retreat is hastily ordered and the column makes the best of its way back again in Indian file once more. Suddenly there is a crash. A piece has fallen on the rear guard! A piece has fallen on a landslide has blocked the way. The engineers go hastily to work, and soon is heard the explosion of a dynamite cartridge and the way is clear again. Nor is the chasseur battling only against man, but with the elements, with the terrible snow storms which blind him, the whirlwinds of winter, and in summer the furnace-like ravines where no air stirs, and whose rocks have been blanched by the pitiless sun.

Fortunately he has these very dangers which diminish the occasions for combat between himself and his hardy rival on the Italian side if war breaks out between the two countries, for men can not fight each other when nature has decided to make war with them. Between the French and the Italian chasseurs, by the way, there is great emulation and respect. They sometimes meet on the frontier line during maneuvers, and it has frequently happened that they have sat down to a meal together at a table whose legs are carefully planted two in France and two in Italy, with the simple soldier dishes and the country wine in the middle.

The Meaning of Sympathy. "It was a clever Frenchwoman who said: 'Those who have suffered much are like those who know many languages. They have learned to understand and to be understood by many. It is an impossibility to fully sympathize with another's experience unless it has been at some time one's own. In trouble or grief we turn instinctively to some one whom we know has been through the same experience. It is the old human longing for companionship that shows itself. The feeling is strong within us that 'she will feel and know with me.' Therein lies the meaning of sympathy.'"

Like a Miracle Consumption—Low Condition Wonderful Results From Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Four years ago while in the old country (England), my daughter Hannah was sent away from the hospital, in a very low condition with consumption of the lungs and bowels, and weak action of the heart. The trip across the water to this country seemed to make her feel better for a while. Then she began to get worse, and for 14 weeks she was unable to get off the bed. She grew worse for five months and lost the use of her limbs and lower part of body, and if she sat up in bed had to be propped up with pillows. Physicians

Said She Was Past All Help and wanted me to send her the 'Home for Invalids.' But I said as long as I could hold my hand up she should not go. We then began Hood's Sarsaparilla. She is getting strong, walks around, is out doors every day, has no trouble with her throat and no cough, and her heart seems to be all right again. She has a first class appetite. We regard her cure as nothing short of a miracle. W. WYATT, 85 Marion Street, Parkdale, Toronto, Ontario.
