Literature And Life

By BOOKMAN

WHAT IS LITERATURE?

Here we are in a world which we may view objectively or subjectively. As I write now the view I get of the world through the immediate use of my senses is confined to the four walls of this room, and such glimpses as I may get of trees and streets and passers-by...

The term "literature" is often misused, for instance we speak of scientific, economic, philosophical, historical, journalistic literature, when we ought to use "writing".

RECEIVING HOGS at Crapaud each Tuesday until 11 A. M. Where roads are passable our trucks will pick up as usual. Robert Dawson

FUNERAL YESTERDAY - The funeral of William Morgan, which was very largely attended, was held yesterday morning from the residence of his brother-in-law Ernest McCarey, 21 Grafton St.

Our visitor from "down under" is right. In our shrinking world "good fellas" (good neighbors, to you) are needed more than ever.

Today Seventh-day Adventists are carrying Christianity to the world in terms of physical, social, and religious uplift.

Large or small, your gift makes you "good fella to world", and remember, "him need it!"

Thoughts For Our Time

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan (Copyright)

With the recent announcement of the granting of pensions and higher wages to workmen by some industries, it is well to remember that these concessions, though not at all unimportant, will never adequately solve the labor problem.

The labor problem goes deeper than the question of labor's rewards. It is intimately connected with the nature itself of human work and opportunities afforded the majority of men to be truly human workmen.

The word artist is used in a much narrower sense today than in former times. Today, the artist's proper field is pretty well defined by what are called the fine arts.

As art in its less restrictive sense has to do with all human making in general, so the term artist rightly belongs to every man who makes things with deliberate skill.

The point about all this is that when man works with deliberate skill, he is exercising an intellectual virtue which disposes him to work well, with ease and with delight.

Now this brings us to the very heart of the labor problem. It would be naive to think that the labor problem is simply a problem of security, of wages and of pensions.

But who does not see that this by itself is not the total solution? Man will never be fully content with his work until the workman and the artist become reunited.

Granting that in a machine age this happy situation is hardly feasible for the majority of workers, it is nevertheless imperative to realize the divorce in questions lies close to the heart of the labor problem and that an earnest effort must be made to reduce the breach.

Indeed that until the laborer in some more definite way rejoins the artist and thereby experiences greater enjoyment in his work, no amount of increase in wages or pensions will adequately solve the labor problem.

But when a vast number of workmen are found on the level of those in whom the exercise of mind predominates, the well-being of society may be seriously threatened.

Need Reuniting Frankly, is there any enjoyment in his work for the manual laborer who in endless repetition performs some single operation on a machine which someone else has devised and set in motion?

His monotonously dull mechanical action leaves him but little room to think for himself, which in fact might even prove an hindrance to his work, throwing him out of gear with the mechanism of which he has become part.

To remedy the situation, it is hardly to the point to talk of discarding the machine and returning to the days of the handicraftsman. Everyone has confidence that the machine is here to stay, since there are some things we shall always prefer to produce by machine.

For this reason some seek a solution in the direction of labor-organized industry. And one must admit that giving the workman a share in the control and ownership of industry does partly compensate for the lack of intellectual responsibility he suffers in his work.

But who does not see that this by itself is not the total solution? Man will never be fully content with his work until the workman and the artist become reunited.

Granting that in a machine age this happy situation is hardly feasible for the majority of workers, it is nevertheless imperative to realize the divorce in questions lies close to the heart of the labor problem and that an earnest effort must be made to reduce the breach.
