NEW YORK
LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Assets, January 1st, 1868,
Over Ten Million Dollars

HEAD OFFICE 112 & 114 Broadway, N. Y.
General Agents for the Dominion of Canada:
BURKE & SUMMERVILLE,
Herald Buildings, Montreal.

The New York
Life Insurance Company

OLDEST INSTITUTIONS

Of the kind in America, having been chartered in the year 1841, and commenced business in May, 1845.
During the twenty three years of its existence, it has issued policies upon the lives of more than Fifty Thousand Persons, and has paid in losses $50,000 to the families and representatives of those who have deceased while members of the Company.

Annual Income
EXCEEDS
Four Million Dollars.

A SAFE INVESTMENT.

The instances are many within the experience of every Life Insurance Company, in which the proceeds of a Policy has saved from poverty the survivors of those who have thus made provision for their wants in times of prosperity and health. A wife may insure the life of her husband for her own benefit, and should she survive him, the amount of the insurance will be payable to her free from any claims against her estate; and in case of the death of the wife before that of the husband, the amount of the insurance may be made payable to her children.

THE COMPANY DECLARES
ANNUAL CASH DIVIDENDS, which are available in payment of each Annual Premium. All the insured in this Company receive dividends which can be used in part of the second and each subsequent Annual Premium thereafter; or the dividend may be allowed to accumulate, and subsequently used in whole or in part in the payment of Premiums. The business of the Company being PURELY MUTUAL, each member pays only the average cost of insurance, all surplus being annually returned to the Policy holders.
(Companies having a Stock Capital usually retain a large portion for the Stockholders.) The Dividends paid to Policy holders exceed $3,000,000.

Endowment Assurance Policies.
These Policies are coming into general request As a sure and profitable investment for one's declining years, they deserve the attention of all.
The sum secured by an ordinary life policy becomes available upon the death of the insured; on the Endowment plan the amount is received by the insured himself upon his attaining a specified age, while full provision is made for death occurring prior thereto.

THE NON-FORFEITURE PLAN.
This Company originated and introduced the valuable feature known as the Non-Forfeiture Plan which is rapidly superseding the old system of life long policies, and has revolutionized the system of Life Insurance in the United States, and which has been adopted generally in a less favorable form by all Life Companies. A party, by this table, after the second year, cannot forfeit any part of what has been paid to him.

Tables of Rates, Circulars, Examples of Dividends, Forms, &c., can be had by applying to the Agent, at Charlottetown.

The Terms and conditions of Assurance of this old established Company, are as liberal and unrestricted as those of other good companies, and the rates which are founded on the higher interest obtainable in Canada than in Great Britain, are lower than those of British and American Offices.

Endowment Policies payable during lifetime of assured Policies payable during a LIMITED NUMBER OF YEARS.
Liberal regulations as to foreign residence, travel and occupation.

POETRY.

VERSES
WRITTEN BY THE LATE MRS. KELLY A FEW DAYS BEFORE HER DEATH.

I cannot leave those earthly scenes
To me made doubly dear,
By groups of lov'd and loving ones,
Who fondly watch me here.

I cannot leave those true, true hearts,
O, Lord, thy child's life spare;
Look pityingly upon me here
And grant my humble prayer.

But cease my weak and sinful heart!
Bow to thy Saviour's will,
To Him whose voice thou hearest now—
"Peace to the waves"—"Be still!"

Be still in adoration mute, Kneel to thy Father's Throne,
And beg the grace and happiness
To enter thy Heavenly Home.

St. John N. B. M. E. K.

ROSE TERRACE; OR,
The Trail of the Serpent.

Continued.

I obeyed, and scanned the features of the gentleman pointed out with careful attention. He was perhaps eight-and-twenty years of age; tall and elegant in form, with a graceful faculty of movement rarely met with in such perfection. His face was exceedingly handsome, rendered striking by flashing black eyes and jolly, heavily marked eyebrows, while the mouth, with its curved upper lip, bespoke the pride of the possessor. I was too much of a child, however, to particularly notice all this at the time; and, besides, how tame was any man, just then, before that awful green curtain! I lowered my lorgnette at last.

"Well, my lord?"
"That gentleman is my son, Lord Chester; may I introduce him to you?" I felt surprised at this announcement, being previously ignorant that the earl had a son. I answered—
"Just as your lordship pleases—if you have mamma's consent."

"Thanks,"
He beckoned to Lord Chester, who nodded a careless acknowledgment, and leisurely sauntered from his box; presently he joined us, and the introduction was barely over ere the curtain rose again.

I drew a long breath when the act was ended, and let the box during its progress, and I turned to Lord Chester, who was seated by my side.

"Is it not beautiful?" I asked him, with a child's enthusiastic eagerness.

"Yes—and quite tolerably played," he answered, carelessly, his piercing black eyes looking all over me, or, at least, I thought so, so much did his keen glance seem to take in. "But one is apt to tire of such things, you know. This is your first visit to a theatre."

"Yes."
"I judged so. I have been agreeably entertained by the various expressions of your face."

"And did you prefer that to watching the play? Is it possible that one can ever tire of this fairy land?"

"Not only possible," he returned, smiling gravely, "but an established fact. I am afraid. 'Tis a pity that our pleasures so soon lose zest and novelty! There's nothing new in the world, and life itself is a bore when one has lived out half of his allotted years."

I looked at the speaker in surprise, astonished to hear one who seemed to possess so many of earth's best gifts speak in such a manner; but I did not know how to answer him, therefore leaned forward to survey the now crowded house, encountering, as I did so, a dreadful array of lorgnettes directed steadily towards my box.
I shrank back into the shadow in dismay.

"A great many people are gazing at your lordship," I said to my companion.
"Do you not think it appears rather rude and ill-bred to make so marked a display of attention?"

"A rudeness sanctioned by custom remains a rudeness no longer," he returned, but you mistake the object of attraction;
it is not I."

"Who then?" I asked in surprise.
"Most ladies would have no difficulty in divining, Miss Melville, particularly when young and so beautiful. It is yourself!"

"Me? Impossible! Who would notice an insignificant, plain little girl like me?
You are either mistaken, my lord, or trying to flatter."

"Why do you consider yourself plain?" he asked.

"My glass always tells me so; and Miss Evans says I am not a bit pretty, like mamma, and tells me to thank God for it—which is asking a little too much, I think, for few people are good enough to be glad they're ugly—don't you think so?"

"Well, it would require considerable Christianity, I should judge," he answered, amusedly. "Who is this Miss Evans?"

"My governess, and a very kind lady."
"Beautiful, probably?"

I reflected a moment, desiring to say ought of my governess which would sound ill-natured.

"No," was thoughtfully replied, "I think not. She is very, very dark, you see, and wears green spectacles; so I do not think we can call her pretty."

"I should judge not. Will you tell her for me that Lionel Chester thinks her system a wrong one? There are some natures which require constant praise and approbation to produce a necessary amount of self-esteem; yours is one of these. I fancy; and you are too beautiful, Miss Melville, to be allowed to think yourself plain. Will you tell her this?"

"My face burned, and I answered in dire confusion.

"Decidedly not, my lord; consider the vanity of such a proceeding! And it is not true, I'm sure. Indeed, you must excuse me—ah! the curtain rises again! Farewell till it falls!"

I scarcely seemed to breathe during the next half hour; it was the act in which Juliet resolves to take the position, and mamma's acting arose to grandeur; her expression of mingled fear, courage and despair alternately thrilled, inspired and appalled me. I almost gasped for breath when she shrieked out the words—

"And in this rage, with some great kinsman's home, As with a club, dash out my desperate brains!" and, as the curtain fell, I sank back in my seat, trembling with the excitement under which I had labored.

Five full minutes must have passed before I remembered I was not alone. I turned, half ashamed, half penitent, to Lord Chester.

"I have been meditating," said he, pleasantly, "by what means I should remind Miss Melville of my existence."

"How rude you must think me! It is the fault of the play! Pray do not consider yourself bound to remain with so dull a companion."

"But if to stay is my pleasure?"
"In that case it is mine as well. Still you must find it very dull here, and I shall not be vexed if you seek pleasanter society."

"Then it is to you a matter of indifference whether I remain or not, I presume?" Feeling that a truthful reply to this question would border on rudeness, I hesitated.

"I am waiting for an answer, Miss Melville."

"Which I would rather not give, if you please, my lord," I said, timidly, quite disconcerted at this turn of the conversation.

"You have given it, even now," he said, a trifle laughingly. "The curtain rises again; pray do not allow me to distract your attention."

"Too childish and indifferent to care for his displeasure, I immediately turned towards the stage, not realizing how my words had offended the vanity of the com-ediant man of the world. And finally the play came to an end."

"It is your mamma's wish that I wait upon you to your carriage," Lord Chester said, as he arranged a heavy shawl around my shoulders. "Have I your permission?"

"Will not mamma accompany me?" I asked, dolefully.

"No; a previous engagement detains her
