

New Church Rebuilt On Site Of London's Oldest

LONDON (AP)—London's oldest church, destroyed by wartime bombing and rebuilt with materials from Canada and other countries, is being reopened Tuesday to carry on work begun 13 centuries ago.

To this church, All Hallows By-the-Tower, the headless bodies of famous Britons were carried after the executioner did them in at the Tower of London. Here William Penn was baptized in 1644 and John Quincy Adams married in 1797.

Its American connections are carried on today by Rev. J. B. M. Frederick, an Episcopal clergyman from Rye, N.Y., who is an assistant on the church staff.

There has been a church on the site since the days of the Saxon Kings. It may date to 604; records show it was definitely standing in 975.

Three times during the second World War it was hit by German bombs. All that remained was the crypt and undercroft, the shell of the tower and the bare stone walls.

Men who planned the rebuilding of London chalked off the church as a hopeless case and suggested that a highway be routed over the site. The vicar, Rev. Philip Clayton, moved in a batch of building materials to claim "squatters' rights" and opened a world wide campaign to get it rebuilt.

He said he wouldn't need a single item of any of Britain's scarce rebuilding materials and went abroad to appeal for the steel, wood, copper and lead he required. He came back with promises of steel from the United States, timber from Australia, Canada and New Zealand, copper from Southern Rhodesia, tiles and lead from Canada.

Planning authorities relented, and the new church—"reborn, re-lived, a phoenix from the ashes," says Mr. Clayton—will be rededicated in the presence of Queen Mother Elizabeth.

Opening lead—jack of spades. Most of the problems in dummy play that are faced by the declarer are not complicated affairs. Declarer just goes about his business taking whatever finesse are necessary, establishing suits, crossruffing, and so on.

Some dummies are extremely difficult to play correctly, there being so many complex factors to consider and so many different conclusions to be reached that the best method of play cannot be found with any degree of certainty.

The most aggravating hands are those where there is a simple solution to a particular problem but, for one reason or another, the declarer suffers a blind spot and overlooks the proper play. These are the hands that are liable to keep a fellow awake all night wondering what caused the mental aberration.

The four heart contract was reached in acceptable style. South had just about enough extra values to rebid his hearts voluntarily and North, of course, carried on to game.

The fact is, though, that South overtook the spade lead with the queen, cashed the king and continued with the ace. South, aware of the danger of an overruff, trumped with the queen, West discarding a diamond.

Two rounds of hearts revealed West had a trump trick. A club was led to dummy, the diamond finesse was attempted, and when it lost, declarer found himself down one.

South bemoaned his ill fortune in having found West with a trump holding that guaranteed him a trump trick as soon as the third round of spades was led. The location of the king of diamonds also came in for honorable mention.

The fact is, though, that South brought about his own defeat. When the third round of spades was led, he was threatened with the loss of a trump and a diamond. Instead of concentrating on whether to ruff the spade with the ten or queen, either of which creates the hazard of a trump loser, South should have discarded a diamond.

By conceding the diamond loser at once, the trump position is left undisturbed and the possibility of defeat is minimized.
