My Little Sweetheart.

Once I had a little sweetheart
In the land of the Malay—
Such a yellow little sweetheart?
Warm and peerless as the day
Of her own dear sunny island,
Keinah, in the far, far East,
Where the mango and banana
Made us many a merry feast.

Such a little copper sweetheart
Was my Golu, plump and round,
With her hair all blue-black streaming
O'er her to the very ground.
Soft and clear as dew-drop clinging
To a grass blade was her eye;
For the heart below was purer
Than the hill stream whispering by.

Costly robes were not for Golu;
No more raiment did she need
Than the milky budding cereal fruit
Or the lily of the mead;
And she was my little sweetheart
Many a sunny summer day,
When we ate the fragrant guavas
In the land of the Malay.

Life was laughing then. Ah, Golu,
Do you think of that old time,
And of the tales I told you
Of my colder western clime?
Do you think how happy were we
When we sailed to strip the palm,
And we made a latteen arbour
Of the boat sail in the calm?

They may call you semi-savage,
Golu! I can not forget
How I poised my little sweetheart
Like a copper statuette.
Now, my path lies through the cities,
But they cannot drive away
My sweet dreams of little Golu
And the land of the Malay.

—W. John Boyle O'Reilly.

Gems of Thought.

All things human change.

The man that blushes is not quite a brute.

Love will not be spurred to what it loathes.

God has commanded time to console the unhappy.

The good is always beautiful; the beautiful is not always good.

A torn jacket is soon mended; but hard words bruise the heart of a child.

The company in which you improve most will be least expensive to you.

The creed of the true saint is to make the best of life, and make the most of it.

The difference between a rich man and a poor man is this—the former eats when he pleases, and the latter when he can get it.

Aspirations after the holy—the only aspiration in which the human soul can be assured that it will never meet with disappointment.

We gain nothing with being with such as ourselves. We encourage one another in mediocrity. I am always longing to be with men more excellent than myself.

To feel much for others, and little for ourselves; to restrain our selfish and to indulge our benevolent affections, constitute the perfection of human nature.

We must never undervalue any person. The workman loves not that his work should be despised in his presence. Now, God is present everywhere, and every person in his work.

It is exceedingly deleterious to withdraw the sanction of religion from amusement. If we feel that it is all injurious we should strip the earth of its flowers and blot out its pleasant sunshine.

A man who shows no defect is a fool or a hypocrite, whom we should mistrust. There are defects so bound to fine qualities that they announce them—defects which it is well not to correct.

The pilot who is always dreading a rock or a tempest must not complain if he remain a poor fisherman. We must at times trust something to fortune. for fortune has often some share in what happens.

You find yourself refreshed by the presence of cheerful people. Why not make earnest effort to confer that pleasure on others? You will find half the battle is gained if you never allow yourself to say anything gloomy.

Edison at Home.

Of the number of persons in the laboratory, remark principally the one you may have least thought of selecting, from the informality of his appearance. The rest are but skilful assistants, to whom he is able to commit some experiments in their secondary stages. It is a figure of perhaps five feet nine in height, bending intently above some detail of work. There is a general appearance of youth about it, but the face, knit into anxious wrinkles, seems old. The dark hair, beginning to be touched with gray, falls over the forehead in a mop. The hands are stained with acid, and the clothing is of an ordinary, "ready-made" order. It is Edison. He has the air of a mechanic, or, more definitely, with his peculiar pallor, of a night-printer. His features are large; the brow well shaped, without unusual developments: the eyes light gray; the nose irregular, and the mouth displaying teeth which are, also, not altogether regular. When he looks up his attention comes backs slowly, as if it had been a long way off. But it comes back fully and cordially, and the expression of the face, now that it can be seen, is frank and prepossessing. A cheerful smile chases away the grave and weary look that belongs to it in its moments of rest. He seems no longer old. He has almost the air of a big, careless schoolboy released from his tasks.

Mr. Gladstone says he takes "what is called egg-flip" when he has a remarkably long speech to make. What he takes when he hsa a long article to write he does not state.

The Colorado Desert.

A night trip by rail will take you across the Colorado desert, which may be properly termed the Sahara of the Pacific coast. Upon a clear, full moonlight night the traveller may form some idea of the sterility and loneliness of this Pacific Sahara. You pass this particular section about midnight, and at the very sterility of the scene a feeling of awe takes possession of the soul. Unlike the greater portion of the desert, whose monotony is disturbed by mountains, hills, lagunes, creeks, and a variety of animal and vegetable life, the eye wanders in all directions and encounters but a vast level surface of fine, white sand. You are in the midst of an ocean of sand; not an elevation, hardly, nor a decline of the feeblest nature, presents itself; the mosquito, the meschal and the cacti have entirely disappeared, and not a bush nor a blade of grass remains: no living thing, not even a bird or an insect, is to be seen. A death-like stillness seems to pervade the scene, and an awful unbroken quiet prevails. In this particular locality, it is said, rain never descends: no dew ever falls—no delicious exhaltation of the evening ever touch the fevered face of nature, which diurnally quivers under the scorching rays of the monarch of light. It is true that a passing cloud, over-freighted with some moisture, sometimes bursts, or is dashed by a driving wind against some distant mountain top, and is made to discharge its voluminous contents with distinctive force all over the desert; but the blazing orb quickly transforms such visitations into the merest evidences of perspiration. and the whole surface soon after assumes its natural state of incandescence. Cowper's beautiful thought:

"God moves in a mysterious way," etc.,

is felt with all that sublime force and ecstacy of expression which must have controlled the gifted poet in its production.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Consider the Question.

The Monetary Times says: There is a strong feeling on the part of not a few experienced business men in Canada that the prevailing evils of compositions, and the rehabilitation of insolvent traders, will not be done away with so long as the Insolvent Act is in force; that the tendency of that law, and the administration of it by assignees, is in the direction of retaining superfluous traders in business.

On the other hand, there is a great deal to be said in favor of the necessity for such an enactment: which it is contended, if obeyed in the proper spirit forms a protection to general creditors against the preferred payment of any one, and should work no harm, but good to the honest trader.

A continuance of insolvencies, compromises, and consequent reduction of profits by slaughtered stock, must in time bring down the strongest men we have in business. No house, or group of houses even, but must succumb to the levelling force of such unfair competition as theirs who pay 25 cents in the dollar for their goods. It is needful, therefore, that every merchant should give attention to the causes of troubles so grave, and which are lifting but slowly, if at all.

Another effort is likely to be made before Parliament assembles, to have the Act temporarily suspended; and the suggestion has been made that such an Act should only come into force for a twelve-month every five years, in order that deserving but unfortunate men may be relieved. Can nothing be done to elicit mercantile opinion and to promote concert upon such a question? The Boards of Trade of our cities and towns might each profitably elicit the views of its members, and interchange their resolutions with similar bodies in other towns. The Dominion Board of Trade might collect these and apply them. Or, would not the Chambers of Commerce, or the merchants in any town where no such body exists, appoint delegates to attend a meeting at, say Montreal or Toronto, to consider whether the Insolvent Act is alone to blame for the condition of things, and publicly to discuss trade subjects which, as has been said, are important enough indeed to form the subject of a Parliamentary commission. We throw out these suggestions for rousing or reaching commercial opinion upon matters whereon a few think and feel deeply, but the many do not think at all in proportion to their moment.

Our American cousins are never tired of descanting on the immensity of their institutions. Not long ago an Englishman travelling in the States met a Yankee, who proudly stated that he knew England well. "I guess," said he, "that I saw pretty well the whole of your country; I was there five days last fall." "And you saw London?" asked the enthralled Saxon. "Certainly I did, sir; and it air a tarnation big village, I do confess; but we have a fall, sir, that would sweep the whole place to Gehenna in about three minutes." "And where is the fall?" demanded the Englishman, who was geographically knowing. "I mean, sir, the Falls of Niagara." "Then, my good man," said the Saxon, "you are mistaken. All the water that goes over the American side of the Falls would not clean the teeth of half the people in London." And such is almost the fact, for the part of the Fall that comes over in all its force and grandeur belongs to England, and not to the States.—English paper.

Sensible Advice.

You are asked every day through the columns of newspapers and by your Druggists to use something for your Dyspepsia and Liver complaint that you know nothing about, you get discouraged spending money with but little success. Now to give you satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will cure you of Dyspepsia and Liver complaint with all its effects, such as sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Habitual Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, Heart-burn, Water-brash, Fullness at the pit of the Stomach, Yellow Skin, Coated Tongue, Indigestion, swimming of the head, low spirits, &c., we ask you to go to your Druggist and get a sample bottle of Green's August Flower, for 10 cents, and try it, or a regular size for 75 cents. Two does will relieve you.
