LISTEN TO REASON!

NO DECEPTION!

L. E. PROWSE does not offer a discount of 33 per cent; to do so, 50 per cent profit would need to be added. Such profit would ruin a farmer or any other man—33 per cent discount means a profit of 50 per cent. But the facts are: He buys for cash only, therefore buy from 15 to 25 per cent less than many houses in the trade, and can afford to sell even less than those who pretend to give those Fabulous Discounts.

Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000) worth of Clothing at wonderful low prices. Overcoats from $2.75, Suits from $4.50 up. Job Lot Clothing at about half-price. Large stock of Dress Goods, Sacques, Ulsters, Sacque Cloth, Ladies' Hats, &c., very cheap. Shirts and Underclothing below competition.

Every sensible man and woman should see his stock and not be led away by sensational advertisements.

The Martyr Prelate.

DIARY OF BISHOP HANNINGTON, MURDERED BY ORDER OF KING MUANGA.

The diary of Bishop Hannington, who was put to death by order of King Muanga, of Uganda, Africa, has been published, giving the details of the last week of his life. He describes the arrival of his party at Lubura, where a chief, at the head of a thousand troops, demanded ten guns and three barrels of powder. The chief asked Bishop Hannington to remain with him for a day and the latter complied. While taking a walk the Bishop was attacked by about twenty natives and struggled with his assailants, but became weak and faint and was dragged violently a long distance by the legs. When his persecutors halted they stripped and robbed and imprisoned him in a noisome hut full of vermin and decaying bananas. While he was lying ill and helpless, the chief and his hundred wives came out of curiosity to feast their eyes on him. On the next day he was allowed to return to his tent, where, though ill, he felt more comfortable. He was guarded, however, by natives. He remained in bed during the following days. Parties of the chief's wives, out of idle curiosity, came daily to see him. He was allowed to send messages to friends, but he believed they were intercepted. On the seventh day he writes that the fever continued; that at night the place swarmed with vermin; that the guards were drunk and noisy; and that he was unable to sleep. At last he became delirious. On the eighth day, September 29, he was conscious. His entries on this day are brief: "No news; a hyena howled all night, smelling the sick man; I hope he will not have me yet." This is the final entry. It is believed that shortly after writing this he was taken out and put to death.

Sad State of Affairs.

The accounts received from St. Petersburg of the killing of an Ade-de-Camp by the Czar reveal a condition of things that had not been generally realized. Every one is familiar with the precautions that are taken when the Czar travels; how several carriages are used without anyone being allowed to know which contains the Emperor; how houses, embankments, and every place of possible concealment along the route are examined, and how false reports are given out as to the time of the Emperor's start. Few, however, imagined that the Czar lived in such deadly fear of assassination that a hasty movement on the part of one of his staff caused him to shoot the unfortunate man lest he might be drawing a revolver. A crown and a throne under these conditions appear to be hardly worth having. When the affair occurred the Russian officials denied it, and the story was told that the Czar's passionate temper had got the better of him, and that the officer had answered him and further angered him. This story, which European journals say is false, would only show that the Emperor is a deliberate murderer, without the excuse of self-defence. It is of course, well known that he is a veritable Peter in brutality and passion. He is a Russian that hardly requires scratching to disclose his real qualities, and even when a boy his demeanor was such that ominous things were said about him should he become Czar. He is a ruler who is likely to bring social matters in Russia to a point.

A Miraculous Escape.

A remarkable accident, particularly in regard to its results, occurred at Catskill, N. Y., last week. Arthur Story was delivering a barrel of flour at a house near the east end of the bridge of the West Shore Railroad which spans Catskill Creek. The house is built near the brink of the rock, which has a precipitous descent of more than 100 feet. The horse took fright and backed suddenly, and to the indescribable horror of those who witnessed the accident, disappeared with his driver over the cliff. After falling about half the distance the wagon was caught by the limbs of a tree, the horse hanging head downward suspended in the air. The driver, who had held on to the wagon, now descended the tree, and the horse, by its struggling, broke the harness, and, rolling over several times, brought up against the stump of another tree on a narrow ledge of rock. It was brought down with considerable difficulty further assistance was obtained. Beyond some rather severe cuts and bruises no injury was suffered by either man or beast.

New Public Houses.

During the three years following the revival of temperance work in Germany there has been a great deal of talking, arguing and preparing for work, but of actual work little has been done. Now at last it seems as if the time for organized action had come, and one large town after the other has seen the opening of coffee houses or two some principles as those in our own country. The largest of these "public houses" has called 'future,' as a German writer has called them, has recently been opened at Hamburg, and the success has been such that, notwithstanding the great expenses which naturally attend the beginning of such an undertaking, there has been a small profit even at the end of the first month. This is the more encouraging as the articles of food are sold at prices which to us must appear ridiculously low. Thus, a large cup of coffee, with milk and sugar—the latter a luxury generally only indulged in by the well to do—is charged a half-penny, while a cup of tea, chocolate, or beef tea costs a penny. That Hamburg, the German Liverpool, takes the initiative in the temperance movement is highly gratifying, and the success of the first German coffee house of this kind will no doubt be a great stimulus to other large towns to follow suit. And how dire the need for such institutions is throughout the country must be apparent to all who have any personal knowledge of the German nation.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Coal Fields.

The principal coal fields in Great Britain, namely those of Newcastle, South Wales and the Clyde country, yield about 170 million tons a year. It is estimated that at this rate of production the supply will hold out from six hundred to eight hundred years. Germany's coal supply is more bounteous and is believed to be good for a thousand years to come. France, Austria, Denmark, Russia, Sweden and Italy are also so well equipped with coal fields that there is no prospect of exhaustion for centuries to come. Before the world's coal can be exhausted we know not what science and discovery may do to supply a substitute. It would seem that not only the present generation, but many generations to come may rest easy so far as the question of fuel is concerned.

What True Merit Will Do.

The unprecedented sale of Bosch's German Syrup within a few years has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a Cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, the parts affected, and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when these diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price 75 cents, large bottles.

As a rule, man is not overpoweringly brilliant. When I hear of any great performance, I am more than eager to place it to his limited credit. Man deserves some praise for trying to shine. Naturally, he can never obtain the witty heights of woman, but he gets more than even. He always has his own way, which no woman ever has. He can spend all the money he wants to, which no woman ever can. He stays out till all hours, which no woman is allowed to do. He can spend $2.50 for a lunch, and the family at a quart of ice cream bought for the group use, and he can spend $25 for a lark, while she stays at home with the children and burns one gas jet and eats the scraps. Yes, there are times—all times—when a man has the best of it.

People who wonder where house flies come from may be interested in knowing that they are to be met on the plains 200 miles from any house; and that they buzz around the highest peaks of the Andes as well as elsewhere. They have been known since the days of Adam and Eve, and they prove to stick right by and see the show out.

The grog-shops of the City of Mexico have such titles as, "The Birth of Venus," "The Kiss of Love," "The Life Eternal," "The Bacchus," "The Shipwreck," "The Delirium Tremens," and "The Little Hell." Mexican toppers are determined to know the name of the road to ruin on which they are traveling.

Exemption from mistake is not the privilege of mortals; but when our mistakes are involuntary, we owe each other every candid consideration; and the man who on discovering his errors acknowledges and corrects them, is scarcely less entitled to our esteem than if he had not erred.

Lars Olsen Smith, the great "brandy king," has been converted, and will give up liquor selling. "I think this better," he says, "to use the money I have gained in denouncing and poisoning the people in drinking, as far as possible, the mischief that unwillingly I created."

There is one servant for every two guests at Queen Victoria's table. The Queen does not believe in washing her substance in riotous living, and it is said her guests eat comparatively frugal fare. When the meal is finished, Her Majesty is first to leave the room.
