ELLEN'S DIARY

'Whatever Will Be, Will Be' - The Farmer Accepts His Lot

"It's a south wind," we said cuddling down last night beside James in the wide old bed. He listened a moment... as we have so often seen him do, taking stock of the course of the farming throughout the night-hours. The springtime bleat of a laboring ewe in the silence, the summoning low of a heifer freshening, the ring of a fence sending a message to him that all was not serene in a pasture, a sudden change of wind or weather for the better or worse—how quickly he can hear the like, as it comes to interrupt even his sweetest of dreams.

"South, Ellen," he commented, "there's east in it too I'd say. Hear that shower! We need it by rights. Springs and brooks are low. But it would be good to get the threshing done. Oh well," he said settling again to his pillow, "it's like the song I hear the young 'uns sing: 'Whatever will be, will be—that's for sure.'"

And the night wrapped us in a blessed cloud of slumber until the morning-star glimmering through the stirred lawn-branches told us of the clearing, with presently a new day at hand. And "What shall we do this morning?" was the question the farmers must settle. There never comes a weekday to these farms without bringing some item of farming to be done. Today it was to bring home younglings of cattle from far a nosogay of pink and white roses. Miss Lorraine Cousins, niece of the groom, as flower girl, wore a short full-skirted dress of powder blue nylon. Her headpiece was a blue and white hat. She carried a basket of mixed garden flowers.

Mr. John Dunsford, brother of the bride, was groomsman and Messrs. Billy Lank, cousin of the bride, and John Gamble, uncle of the groom, ushered the guests to their pews.

The bride's mother wore a powder blue dress of shantung, with white accessories and a corsage of pink roses. The groom's mother wore a pale green dress with white accessories and a corsage of white roses.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the Queen Hotel, Charlottetown, where the bride's table was decorated with a three tier wedding cake, topped with miniature imitation flowers. Miss Brenda Lea Howatt, cousin of the bride, was in charge of the guest book.

For a honeymoon trip throughout the Maritimes, the bride wore a powder blue and pink dress of nylon with white accessories.

Mr. and Mrs. MacNevin will reside at South Melville.

Out of town guests were: Mrs. Henry Blanchard and Mrs. Jennie Clark, Cambridge, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Percy Dunsford and David Dunsford, Westwood, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Earl Drinkwater, Melrose, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Jack Secker of Toronto, Ontario.

rented pastures by way of the busy little truck. Spring purchases these were, more and less of indifferent promise they seemed. Only James and the younger farmer and Mack could foresee they would "grow into something." The summer was kind to them. Accordingly gains must be noted in our beef-farming interests before they were turned into pastures at home.

News from the holidaying neighbors reached us today—pleasant tidings from Mr. and Mrs. A. who vacation with kin in the States. A pretty card: "We had sunshine and fine weather with us on our trip. Having a nice time—enjoying it much!"

But even amid life's pleasures, sorrows thrust themselves on folks, closing out for a time all sunshine, causing loved ones to walk bereaved through the shadows. There is a fresh mound of earth heaped now beside an open grave in the shadow of the "Old Kirk" at the corner, which awaits all that are mortal of one of her children.

Of late passed away. Gone for some years from the scenes of her birth and rearing, she returns as do many Islanders abroad to rest at last in the red of the loved Island clay. She was a loveable happy girl, bright and pretty—a red-haired lass. Serenely she sleeps in her coffin, every trace of weariness of earth, misery of trying illness and suffering past. Family, kin, schoolmates, friends come in to sit sadly with her this last night, to mourn the passing of one in life well loved. When she comes to her last resting place tomorrow, there in that green God's Acre where old maples flame in death's shades we shall know that as the buds of springtime promise show when the leaves at length drift to earth, so for all "God's Chillens" there is in death promised glory beyond.

Until tomorrow — — Diary, Good-night.
