MR. AND MRS. FRANCIS JAMES POOLE

St. Mary's Church, Souris, Is Scene Of Pretty Fall Wedding

A very pretty wedding was solemnized in St. Mary's Church in Souris recently, when Teresa Ann Keays was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Francis James Poole.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lorne Keays, Souris and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Poole Souris. Rev. John E. Cash performed the double ring ceremony and also celebrated the nuptial mass.

The altar was decorated with soft vigil lights and baskets of flowers and the guest pews were marked with red satin bows. The wedding music was provided by Sr. St. Felix who also accompanied William Chaisson, Rollo Bay and Misses Edith Cheverie, Paulette Grant and Eleanor Clinton of Souris as they sang many beautiful hymns during the ceremony and of the signing of the register.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Wendell, was lovely in her wedding gown of nylon organza over taffeta. the gown was floor length and featured lily-point sleeves with lace trim on bodice and also on the skirt. Her bouffant shoulder length veil of tulle illusion was held in place by a pearl and diamond studded tiara. She carried a white prayer book trimmed with yellow roses and white streamers. Her only jewellery was a single strand of pearls and matching earrings, a gift from the groom.

The bride was attended by her sister Miss Katherine Keays, as maid of honor and the brides-maids were Miss Henrietta Keays, sister of the bride and Miss Jeanette Cheverie, friend of the bride. They were identically gowned in ballerina dresses of red velvet fashioned with simple lines, and wore identical white headdresses with white accessories and carried bouquets of white carnations. Their pearl jewellery was a gift from the bride.

Michael MacDonald, friend of the groom, was the best man and the guests were ushered to their pews by Elmer Keays, brother of the bride and Ira Stewart, friend of the groom.

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs. Keays chose a flowered sheath dress of royal blue and her accessories were also in royal blue. Her corsage was of yellow carnations. Mrs. Poole, mother of the groom, chose a royal blue, wool sheath with matching accessories and a corsage of white carnations. Mrs. James Dingwell, grandmother of the groom, was attired in a floral design dress with matching accessories and her corsage was of white carnations.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Souris Legion Home for approximately 65 guests. The hall was tastefully decorated for the occasion and the bride's table with its attractive arrangement of cut flowers and lighted tapers was centered with a three-tier wedding cake.

St. Clair Dunphy, brother-in-law of the bride, acted as master of ceremonies and called upon Rev. John Cash to propose the toast to the bride and groom. The toast to the bridesmaids was proposed by Ira Stewart. Telegrams of congratulations, including one from Joyce Dingwell, Toronto, cousin of the groom, were read by Mr. Dunphy.

In the evening a reception for 150 guests was held at the home of the bride's sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. St. Clair Dunphy, Peakes Station.

Out of town guests at the wedding included Mr. and Mrs. Stephen E. Cook and Ann Marie, Hyde Park, Mass; Mr. Wendell Keays, Roslindale, Mass; Mr. Allan Keays, Hyde Park, Mass; Miss Jean Shaw. Middleboro, Mass.; Mrs. Edward Welch and Wayne, Cambridge, Mass.

For travelling Mrs. Poole donned a chocolate brown two piece suit with beige accessories and a corsage of yellow carnations. Their honeymoon trip took them to points of interest in the Maritimes.

Mr. and Mrs. Poole have taken up residence in Souris, where Mrs. Poole is a teacher and Mr. Poole is engaged in the fishing industry.

Prior to her marriage the bride was tendered miscellaneous showers at the home of Mrs. Hugh MacAulay, Souris Line Road, and Mrs. Charles MacPhee, Little Harbour.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Morning Fire Sings Of A Forest's Wooded Aisle

There came the sound of a blithe run of notes on the verandah, the door opened and Mack came into the kitchen this morning...This household was at breakfast at the time, table drawn up to the window, which looks past our small lawn and across the front meadow, down upon the mill and stream. A wisp of silver mist curtained lightly the hilltops, to which the fields on the far slope climbed.

"The weather's milder" James offered, sprinkling his porridge with brown sugar.

"The blue jays are calling" Mack nodded. "And isn't it strange" he added, "that all through the frosty days, there was neither sound nor sign of them about?"

"I hope it doesn't bare things too much" James said. "A January thaw usually leaves icy conditions behind it: roads and yards treacherous. For my part, I would rather it had stayed as it was — a bit cold and frosty, with snow on the fields."

"I hope" Mack grinned "It won't thaw so much it will ruin the skating!"

There was a silence. We brought the toast and tea from the stove, the eggs too in the quaint glass cups. The Curiosity-cat near the door, picked up with a dainty tongue the last scraps of his meal from his low bowl, and proceeded then to tidy himself, with a circular motion of this and that paw, now first, one golden ear, then another. The morning-kettle sang a refrain almost as old, it came to mind, as that of the fire that beneath it crackled and flamed. Of springs bubbling crystal-clear between fissures of rock, it was; of brooks rippling happily over rounded pebbles, slipping with a chuckle beneath over-hanging summer-boughs and losing itself in a tangle of green rushes on the way to join river or sea.

The fire sang of trees, of maple and birch, of aspen and spruce, of perfumed woods' aisles, where close by, grew the stately trilliums, the delicate star-flowers, and the waxen mayflowers of the spring.

Curiosity sat now, awaiting patiently a chance to go to the stables, to enjoy a drink of the warm new milk there. He yawned prettily and with a paw gently smoothed back his whiskers.

"Seems as though we're going to have company shortly" we chuckled.

"Guess what's come already?" Mack queried.

James nodded. "I was just going to ask you. I reckoned there would be a new calf by this."

"Yes. Just arrived. And there'll be another in the polebarn soon or I can't read any signs! Couldn't come to a better time, now could they? Right on the new year's nose! To qualify as junior calves in the showring, if we should happen to want them there."

So our young stock arrives, the advance of the spring increase. Not always as happily and healthful do they come, as those of today. For sometimes, despite every care on the part of the farmer, only disappointment attends such events.

Night now dims the countryside. No moon rides the sky. No star. Fog still rests on the hilltops, as January, the stern one, in a mild mood walks the silent winter-fields.

Until tomorrow — — Diary— Good-night.....

MARY HAWORTH

Husband Feels Slighted At Wife's "Can't Talk" Policy

Dear Mary Haworth: Both my wife and I are age 42. We have been married 12 years. She is a registered nurse and works at a local hospital.

She expects me to share everything with her and by the same token I expect her to be equally candid with me. Yet she refuses to answer my questions about her hospital work and co-workers.

She says she feels I have no right to information of that sort. I feel this is a barrier between us and a hindrance to mutual respect and accord.

My wife could ask me any thing at any time on any subject and I would feel she had the right to know the full truth as I see it. Yet she doesn't subscribe to that feeling when I put certain questions to her about the hospital and the staff.

Please advise me and please disguise my initials, as I don't want to jeopardize her job or mine. — G. E.

Dear G. E.: A registered nurse, like a doctor, lawyer or clergyman, has emergency passport to the inner courts of human reticence, an area of confidentiality that is traditionally respected as being off-limits to the passing crowd which has no business there.

Thus your wife is simply doing the decent thing, observing minimum standards of professional propriety, considered binding in her vocation, when she flatly refuses to share with you a chapter-and-verse review of what transpires in her hospital routine.

The truth is, you have no right to try to ransack her proper reserve regarding her professional interchange with patients and-or co-workers. She would be just as wrong as you are wrong if she were to let down the bars of vocational circumspection merely to satisfy your probing curiosity — which, by the way, seems to smack of jealous surveillance of her.

Sharing in marriage isn't a matter of subscribing to a Checkpoint Charlie sort of mutual shakedown for information. Rather, it is a generous dispostion of mind, heart and will: an attitude of trustful, loyal, wholesouled affirmation of one another that doesn't cry for constant reassurance that each is behaving acceptably.

My advice to you is to get firsthand counselling help from a family relations expert in order to uncover and correct the underlying anxieties (and the reasons for them) that are driving a wedge between you and your wife. — M. H.

Dear Mary Haworth: I am in love with a beautiful girl. I watch her every moment I can, but she merely acts like I'm not even there. I would like to get to know her but I am afraid to talk with her.

What should I do? — T. Y.

Dear T. Y.: Watch your language! You can't be in love with a girl you don't know.

At most, you are infatuated with her appearance, which (I gather) suggests to your imagination that she is the living embodiment of your dream-woman.

What to do? Follow the guideline of good manners. Find a mutual friend or acquaintance of good standing — who can vouch for your good character (I hope) — who will introduce you to the damsel.

But if you are indeed afraid to talk to her, don't bother. It is axiomatic that "Faint heart ne'er won fair lady." Success in courtship accrues to the man of courage. M.H.
