The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Dble.
Pass	2 ♦	Pass	3 NT

Opening lead—four of spades.

In this report of a scintillating hand in a rubber bridge game, South's bidding cannot be approved, but paeans of praise are due West for a brilliant defensive maneuver of a type seldom seen.

The double is completely proper, but the jump to three notrump is a singlehanded action which is unwarranted. The proper call—two notrump—announces a hand of opening two notrump dimensions.

South has a very fine high card hand, with 21 points, but it requires some complementary values from partner for a game to be made. Since partner's two diamond bid was made under stress and guaranteed nothing in the way of high cards, South's three notrump bid was a game undertaking based solely on his own hand.

Bidding is supposed to be a partnership project. A two notrump bid in this sequence will stir up another bid from North whenever he has the values which will be required to make three notrump. Bidding for both sides of the team is a fault in which too many players are prone to indulge.

South ducked the first two rounds of spades and won the third. Declarer then played the ace of diamonds, on which West played the king. This extraordinary play defeated the contract.

Declarer could easily make nine tricks but for West's play. By sacrificing the king, West held declarer to two diamond tricks instead of four. The best South could now do was garner eight tricks.

Analysis proves the soundness of West's inspired play. The bidding clearly indicates East can have no ready entry. West must defend on the basis that South will make the contract if he is able to make four diamond tricks. If South has A-J-x or any greater number of diamonds, four diamond tricks become automatic. Therefore, West has to turn to the only feasible holding declarer may have by which four diamond tricks can be stopped. That holding would have to be A-x-x. Such a holding demands that West drop the king on the ace.

Strong reasons compel strong action.

BEDTIME STORIES

Queen Bumble's Story

There is no place for those who shirk,
But only for the ones who work.
—Queen Bumble Bee.

Summer was about over. All summer Peter had seen Bumble Bees flying about without giving them a thought. Early in the spring, when the first flowers had appeared, he had seen Queen Bumble Bee often. They were good friends. Then he had missed her and finally forgotten all about her.

Now he had found where she had been living all summer. It was in an old home that Danny and Nanny Meadow Mouse had left long ago. While he sat there, Queen Bumble came out. She didn't fly away. She was tired and she looked it. Peter wanted to know why she should be so tired when it was her children that had been doing all the flying about all summer.

"There is work and work," said Queen Bumble.

"There is work and work," said Queen Bumble. "There is outside work and inside work and I've had to do both in my time. You see, in the spring when I awoke I was all alone."

Peter interruped. "Do you mean you slept all winter?" he asked.

"Of course I slept all winter. How could I be here if I hadn't slept all winter? As I said, I was all alone when I awoke. It was hard work finding flowers in those days. You may remember that you used to see me. I nearly flew my wings off trying to find flowers enough," said Queen Bumble.

"I remember," said Peter. "When I saw you for the first time, and heard you humming, I knew for sure Sweet Mistress Spring was here."

"O course at that time I had no home and I had to find one," continued Queen Bumble. "I found this old home that those Mouse folk had just left, so I moved in. There was a roof over my head, but I had a lot of work to do inside. And at the same time I had to start a new family. To start a new family, I had to have food ready. I had to have honey and Bee bread. I made the Bee bread out of yellow powder I got from the flowers." She meant the pollen.

Queen Bumlbe stopped to watch one of her daughters go into the house with the sweets she had gathered, then continued. "First, I made a little lump of Bee bread. On this I laid some eggs and covered them with wax to protect them. I made a little wax pot and filled it with honey from the sweets I gathered from the flowers. Perhaps you think that wasn't a lot of hard work, but it was. That honey was for my babies to eat when they hatched from the eggs. As soon as they hatched, they ate their way into their bed which was really the Bee bread I had made.

Those babies grew fast. Just as soon as they were fully grown, those first ones started out to help me. They were not as big as myself and never would be, but they were just as good workers. It was then that I began staying inside most of the time, because I had to lay more eggs, and of course make more Bee bread and more honey for the new babies that were coming along. The more children I had, of course, the more workers I had, and the more work I had to do inside. But now I am through laying eggs. Flowers are getting scarce and it will soon be too late to get sweets to make honey. All my working children are getting tired too. I think I'll fly away for a little exercise of my wings now," said Queen Bumble.

Without another word, Queen Bumble took to her wings and flew away.
