ADAM BRIDE.

CHAPTER XXII.

But she cannot keep in her earrings long, else she may make her uncle and aunt wait. She puts them quickly into the box again, and shuts them up. Some day she will be able to wear any earrings she likes, and already she lives in an invisible world of brilliant costumes, shimmering gauze, soft satin, and velvet, such as the lady's maid at the Chase has shown her in Miss Lydia's wardrobe; she feels the bracelets on her arms, and treads on a soft carpet in front of a tall mirror. But she has one thing in the drawer which she can venture to wear to-day, because she can hang it on the chain of dark-brown berries which she has been used to wear on grand days, with a tiny flat scent-bottle at the end of it tucked inside her frock; and she must put on her brown berries—her neck would look so unfinished without it. Hetty was not quite so fond of the lockets as of the earrings, though it was a handsome large locket, with enamelled flowers at the back, and a beautiful gold border round the glass, which showed a light brown, slightly-waving lock, forming a background for two little dark rings. She must keep it under her clothes, and no one would see it. But Hetty had another passion, only a little less strong than her love of finery, and that other passion made her like to wear the locket even hidden in her bosom.

She would always have worn it, if she had dared to encounter her aunt's questions about a ribbon round her neck. So now she slipped it on along her chain of dark-brown berries, and snapped the chain round her neck. It was not a very long chain, only allowing the locket to hang a little way below the edge of her frock. And she now had nothing to do but to put on her long sleeves and her new white gauze neckerchief, and her straw hat trimmed with white to-day instead of the pink, which had become rather faded under the July sun. That had made the drop of bitterness in Hetty's cup to-day, for it was not quite new—anybody would see that it was a little tanned against the white ribbon—and Mary Burge, she felt sure, would have a new hat of bonnet on. She looked for consolation at her fine white cotton stockings; they really were very nice indeed, and she had given almost all her spare money for them. Hetty's dream of the future could not make her insensible to triumph in the present; to be sure, Captain Donnithorne loved her so that he would never care about looking at other people, but then these other people didn't know how he loved her, and she was not satisfied to appear shabby and insignificant to their eyes even for a short space.

The whole party was assembled in the house when Hetty went down, all of course in their Sunday clothes; and the bell had been ringing as this morning in honor of the Captain's twenty-first birthday, and the work had all been got done so early that Marty and Tommy were not quite easy in their minds until their mother had assured them that going to church was not part of the day's festivities. Mr. Poyser had once suggested that the house should be shut up, and left to take care of itself; 'for,' said he, 'there's no danger of anybody's breaking in—my body'll be in the Chase, thieves and all. If we lock the house up, all the men can go; it's a day they would see twice in their lives.' But Mrs. Poyser answered with great decision: 'I never left the house to take care of itself since I was a missis, and I never will. There's been ill-looking tramps eno' about the place this week, and they collie together, them tramps, as it's a mercy they hanna come and poisoned the dogs and murdered us all in our beds afore we know'd, some Friday night when we got the money in th' house to pay the men. And it's like enough the tramps know where we're going as well as we do ourselves; for if Old Harry wants any work done, you may be sure he'll find the means.'

'Nonsense about murdering us in our beds,' said Mr. Poyser; 'I've got a gun i' our room, hanna, I? and thee'st got ears as 'ud find it out if a mouse was gnawing the bacon. However, if thou wouldstna be easy, Alick can stay at home i' the forepart o' the day, and Tom can come back towards five o'clock, and let Alick have his turn. They may let Growler loose if anybody offers to do mischief, and there's Alick's dog, too, ready enough to set a tooth in a tramp if Alick gives him a wink.'

Mrs. Poyser accepted this compromise, but thought it advisable to bar and bolt to the utmost; and now, at the last moment before starting, Nancy, the dairy maid, was closing the shutters of the house-place, although that window, lying under the immediate observation of Alick and the dogs, might have been supposed the least likely to be selected for burglarious attempt.

The covered cart, without springs, was standing ready to carry the whole family except the men-servants; Mr. Poyser and the grandfather sat on the seat in front, and within there was room for all the women and children; the fuller the cart the better, because then the jolting would not hurt so much, and Nancy's broad person and thick arms were an excellent cushion to be pitched only. But Mr. Poyser drove at no more than a walking pace, that there might be as little risk of jolting as possible on this warm day; and there was time to exchange greetings and remarks with the foot-passengers that were going that way, following the paths between the green meadows and the golden cornfields with bits of movable bright color—a scarlet waistcoat to match the poppies that nodded a little too thickly among the corn, or a dark-blue neckerchief with ends flaunting across a brand new white smock-frock. All Broxton and all Hayslope were to be at the Chase, and make merry there in honor of 'th' heir'; and the old men and women, who had never been so far down this side of the hill for the last twenty years, were being brought from Broxton and Hayslope in one of the farmer's wagons, at Mr. Irvine's suggestion. The church bells had struck up again now—a last time, before the ringers came down the hill to have their share of the festival; and before the bells had finished, other music was heard approaching, so that even Old Brown, the sober horse that was drawing Mr. Poyser's cart, began to prick up his ears. It was the band of the Benefit Club, which had mustered in all its glory; that is to say, in bright blue scarfs and blue favors, and carrying its banner with the motto, 'Let brotherly love continue,' encircling a picture of a stone-pit.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

United and Organized Effort.

Sir,—Through your columns I wish to call the attention of the supporters of the Liberal Conservative Party in King's County to the necessity of forming an Association in this County for the dissemination and advancement of the views held by the party that has, in the past, proved itself to be the one that has our interests as a Province most at heart.

The desirability of union and co-operation is well known among all trades and professions, and nowhere can so much be effected by organization and co-operation as where questions that affect the public interests of a country or province are concerned. The Opposition or Grit Party are alive to the necessity of combining, and they are using every effort to perfect their organization, in order that they can, by specious arguments and misrepresentation, delude the people into supporting their candidates, so that, when the next campaign is opened, they may be in a position to follow up the temporary advantage they secured in 1882.

Many important questions affecting the vital interests of this Island require earnest consideration, and it is our duty, as well wishers of the Province, to see that the hands of our representatives are strengthened in demanding our rights from the Dominion Government; and in no way can our feelings and views be better exhibited than by the formation of a Liberal Conservative Association for King's County.

It is unnecessary for me to recount the many advantages that will accrue from the formation of such an Association, as it is well known that 'he who is prepared for battle is thrice armed,' or to say that it is necessary that the work of organization and preparation for the next political campaign be not deferred until the eleventh hour, when the contest has commenced.

Cannot a meeting be held in Georgetown, at the February term of the Supreme Court, where gentlemen from all parts of the County could attend without much inconvenience, and when steps could be taken to appoint officers and an Executive Committee for each section of the County?

If such a meeting is called, let the friends of the Party in each polling division meet together and select their delegates to attend the Association, so that the work accomplished may be neither sectional or local, but the united expression of the views of Liberal Conservatives in the County.

I am,
Yours respectfully,
A LIBERAL CONSERVATIVE.

Cardigan, King's Co., 7th Feb., 1885.

Sir,—We notice in a late issue of the Patriot, that 'Auld Brig' has again appeared. We also notice he has no more regard for truth than usual. His comments on the people of Victoria Bridge, the C. W. P. and others, are not worth noticing; we must therefore pass on to his complaints. The first is that the Government is spending too much money by giving out work, when the people are not busy. Would it cost less if given out when people were otherwise engaged? He again complained of giving employment to Grits on the Myer's breastwork. Is it because he is afraid it will be like the work done by them there before? Such arguments as he puts forth, must seem ridiculous, even to a Grit.

He also speaks of a mysterious satchel. Is it the one which a notable machine agent takes with him when he leaves his mountainous home to sell his trashy machinery? Or is it akin to the earthen vessel from which the same notable J. P. (for such he is) is supplied with mountain dew in opposition to the Scott Act? If so, why make such ado? But, further, the re-building of the Myer's breastwork is, no doubt, going to cost the Government a considerable amount of money; and it is hoped, when completed, the job will be a lasting one,—not like its predecessor. The men engaged on it are all men whose honesty we have no reason to doubt. I am,

Yours, etc.,
DESABLE.
