In the latter city they were guests of Mr. Crockett's uncle and aunt, Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Russell.

Mother's Day Credited To Miss Anna M. Jarvis

When Canadians across the country observe Mother's Day on Sunday, May 10, they will be following a custom that goes back into civilization's early history. Centuries before the birth of Christ, mothers were held in awe and reverence by Chinese families. The ancient Romans showed their respect for mothers by celebrating an annual festival in honor of Hilaria, the Mother-Goddess. And Mexico's Hahuan Indians more than 1,000 years ago, held flower festivals for Chicomehual, the Earth Mother Goddess.

In England, the practice of "going - a - mothering" developed during the early seventeenth century. Boys and girls, working away from home, were allowed to spend "Mothering Sunday" with their families.

Since most of the youngsters had to walk many miles to get home, many churches provided food for the young travelers. The children often took violets and cakes and gifts for their mothers. "Mothering Sunday"—still vividly observed in England—in turn is believed to have stemmed from the observance of "Refreshment Sunday" during mid-Lent. On this occasion, people visited their "Mother Church" and offered cakes and flowers at the altar. Gradually, these people began visiting their parents on the same day and presented them with cakes and flowers also. The Canadian and U. S. Mother's Day is credited to Miss Anna M. Jarvis, a Philadelphia Sunday school teacher. In 1908, she held a memorial service for her own mother in a Methodist Church there.

The idea caught on, spreading rapidly from city to city. Only six years later, President Wilson signed a Congressional resolution setting aside the second Sunday of every May as the official Mother's Day.

It wasn't long before the practice was taken up in Canada. In 1920, one Toronto newspaper was able to headline a "Wide observance of Mother's Day." The custom has spread to the extent that Mother's Day now is celebrated in every community in the country.

Dr. Warren G. Cutts Gives Ideas On Reading

Accurate diagnosis of a child's reading problems can only be based on a detailed study of all phases of his development. This is the contention of Dr. Warren G. Cutts, director of the Kent State University Reading Centre.

According to Dr. Cutts, a child's reading difficulty may be traced to any one or all of these areas: Intelligence, personality, educational history, physical handicaps. In his address Dr. Cutts warned against the "shotgun approach" to treatment of reading problems.

This, he explained, "is the application of a random assortment of techniques to each and every individual with a reading problem in the hope that something will be good for him."

ELLEN'S DIARY

Mother Remembered By Great Men Of History

This morning, Alex, younger lad of the house across the lane was our guest. A good little chap, he amused himself with the playthings we provided and also found much of interest in exploring in the low cupboards of pantry and kitchen as such fellows of (almost) two will.

He played and chattered and smiled, quite happy in his interests until at length, doubtless at a single thought, these pastimes failed to charm and he betook himself quietly to a small rock-ledge to rock and hum what we could recognize as a lonely little tune. There was definite longing in the sober blue eyes, one which soon found expression on young lips.

"Where's my Mommie?" he asked wistfully.

And it came to mind that no matter the age, this is a name precious to all, one which remains forever tenderly enshrined in folks' hearts. Someone reminds us that this is one touch of nature common to mankind "the wide world over." A man may have neither sister nor sweetheart or wife but he has a mother in person, or in memory, to respect and to love.

There are we remember mothers in varying fashions and degrees of mothering, but as yet we have not seen that one who has failed to keep always the welfare of her children at heart. Indeed how many we have known who were martyrs to their estate, decaying no labour on their behalf too demanding, no personal sacrifice too great.

At Alderlea, looking back, it seems now that our mothering was mostly nominal, since the years themselves took the sons and grew them up to the forming. But if at any time our role was at all burdensome, in pleasant memories retained, we have been already overpaid.

When we see young mothers of it may be several, wishing away the tender years of their small ones-looking ahead to the days when they will be grown, we invariably pity them. They do not realize how very good are their days now at hand. Indeed they are much to be envied in the complete trust of their small ones, who look to them not only for loving care and understanding but also the fine example of living which they all can best impart.

And now comes Mothers' Day—set apart, hallowed we believe, to remind us if need be to pay our tribute of love to our mothers in the flesh, or, and it may be with many a regret, only in memory. What do we owe our mothers? Nay what do we not owe to them, that on their Day and always we praise and bless? We think of the great of earth—the legion of them who ever honored theirs: Lincoln, the step-mother who had reared and loved him as her own, Washington the first President, who sent a messenger to his in his hour of triumph to say that he was coming at once to visit her ("I shall need a white apron for this" she commented proudly); Lord Tweedsmuir of whom it is said he wrote to his mother every day; J. M. Barrie, whose words and writings continue to live on "The thousand letters to her are the only writings of which I shall boast; I would not there held Thursday in the lower church had been one less, though I could have written an immortal book with it." Longfellow, whose poetry still charms: "Even He who died upon the cross was mindful of His mother, as if to teach us that this holy love should be, our last worldly thought, the last point of earth from which the soul should take its flight for Heaven; Edgar Guest, who wrote, "Gentle hands that never weary Telling in Love's Vineyard sweet, Eyes that seem forever cheery When our eyes they chance to meet"; Tender, patient, brave, devoted, This is always Mother's way, Could her worth in gold be quoted As you think of her today?"

CLYDE RIVER W.I. Mrs. Arnold Beer entertained the members of Clyde River W. I., on Monday night, May 4th. In the absence of the president, the vice-president Mrs. Reg MacKinnon presided.

Meeting opened with Ode and Collect, six members answered the roll call and three visitors were present. Mrs. W. A. MacLean read the report of the treasurer, $30.10 was made at the festival rehearsal and cake sale leaving a balance of $74.76 on hand. All bills were paid.

A thank you card was read for treat sent while in hospital from a member. It was decided to remember a bereaved family in the community.

TO MOTHER

My heart is sad dear Mother, When I hear the robin sing, Because you cannot share with me The loveliness of spring.

The picture of your smiling face I carry in my heart, And hear again your gentle voice Though we are world's apart.

But O your memory seems to bless As long years wander by, And thoughts of you are brighter far Than rainbows in the sky.

You are a part of everything— Of every poem I write, Of you the golden sunlight, and The beauty of the night.

You are the splendor of the dawn The silver of a star, And surely all the angels know How wonderful you are.

And though you left me quietly, As sinks beneath the hill The glory of the setting sun Clear, beautiful and still.

My memories of you are as dear As in the long ago, For the lovely name of "Mother" Is the sweetest name I know.

CONSTANCE I. HECKBERT. and seconded by Sadie Gillespie that William Murchison be given a donation for the school. School committee reported ordering a blackboard for the school. The sick committee also reported.

It was decided to clean the hall on Tuesday afternoon, May 13th and everyone is asked to help. The W.I. convention is to be held there in June. Collection for evening amounted to $1.30.

Next place of meeting was undecided. Roll call will be exchange of flower slips. Lunch committee will be Hazel Beer, Sadie Gillespie, Phoebe MacKinnon and Laura MacNeill.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem. Laura MacNeill had charge of the program which was most enjoyable. Lunch was served.
