Modern Baby Blue

Smuckering puckerlets whirled in the crapuscular rays of the early morning sun, as baby blue mop sung her way over the spotless floor of the lounge area in the Robertson Library.

Early morning students are much like early morning downtown shoppers, thought the baby blue mop-head. As she gobbled up the greasies using a new type of de greaser floor soap, her mop-head was all a foam with the joy of being able to remove deep greasy stains, which previously had to be given to need much soaking and rubbing. Too, she thought, that this was just a wonderful time in life to be a flopsy mop with all the new discoveries of modern technology, making the lifespan of a baby blue mop-head a real pushover. When suddenly she was brought back to reality, when the janitor stuck her curly grubby locks into the rinse bucket of water and held her head under for the count of twenty of more, and she thought to herself, while waiting to come up for air ... am I ever glad that I take deep breathing exercises while on the night shift. No sooner had her smuckering puckerlets filled with clean water, than she was stuffed into the wringer for her baby blue wring-out, then, she was all smiles again, ready for more yummie grease-gobbling floor smuckering.

Recent statements made by the provincial Ministers Education and the MacDonald Royal Commission Challenges and Choices calling for the standardization of education come as a shock to those involved in the field of education.

The mere suggestion of such a system is apt to send tingling up the backs of students.

What does this "standardization of education" mean at UPEI?

Well, to put it simply, this new system would design one university as providing one or two programs.

UPEI may offer only Veterinary Medicine and Comp Science, for example. If you wanted to study Engineering you would have to go to UNB. If Business was your preference, you would go to St. Mary's.

The bottom line would entail students of UPEI having to leave the Island to receive their education elsewhere if it is not available at UPEI.

Such a system would prove both unpopular and unacceptable for P.E.I. students.

The serious problem facing students today is that they are always the last to be consulted on issues that affect their futures.

Who cares about the wishes of students when it comes to providing good quality education?

Government, on both the provincial and federal level, is presently interested only in what the job market dictates, and the wishes of students are far down on the list of priorities.

We, as students, must become more involved in the evaluation of our educational system. It is up to us to play an important role in speaking with and advising government on the interests of students.

It is only when students play a role in this process that our education interests can be best served. If we fail to play that important role, our educational system may be drastically changed or altered to serve the interests of government.

The "standardization of education" in Canada and P.E.I. is unnecessary. Our post-secondary education system has its problems, but standardization is not a solution to our problems.

To implement such a system would only compound our problems which already exist.

As students at this institution, we need to address the issue of a standardized educational system. It is no good to sit back and be wary of the recommendations that have been put before us.

The ball is now in our court and we, as students, must address this important issue in a rational and educational manner.

I encourage you students to take a stand. It is up to you to become involved in playing an important part in the future of UPEI.

If we fail to make our views known today, it is just a little too late to change tomorrow's decision.

"And that's my point of view!"
