Let's Talk It Over

Bedeque Hospitality Chalk up another notable achievement for Island hospitality. Three cars and a truck gave up the battle against snowdrift at Green's Hill, just west of Central Bedeque early last Thursday morning, and hockey players and fans to the number of 29, sought shelter from the storm at a farm home on the top of the hill. Twenty-nine unexpected guests at 2.30 a. m.!

But Mr. Charley Green took us in, and welcomed us as if we were an over-sized family belonging to a rich uncle with a poor life expectancy. He stayed up all night chatting with some of the boys. His living room floor was littered with recumbent forms, and others were draped on couches and chairs, all seeking the arms of Morpheus, who was playing hard-to-get.

Mr. Green's family were sleeping upstairs, so we personally were kept pretty busy keeping the sounds of the revelry to a minimum. Some boys, unable to sleep, and with a yen for barbershop harmony, started to sing. It was slow and croony, but from remarks hurled at the vocalists we gathered it wasn't a lullaby. We were finally able to "tell them why this wasn't the time and the place."

Some started to play cards and the thump of the ace crashing down on the jack was also not conducive to slumber.

When Mrs. Green came downstairs in the morning, coffee was served to the whole group, and later sandwiches. Mr. Ralph Callbeck, proprietor of the large corner store, which we visited about 8 a. m., presented us with a donation of delicacies which had been baked for a concert in the Bedeque Hall, which the storm had caused to be postponed.
