TIMELY NOTES ON FUR FARMING

FURS ON CREDIT

Now that credit buying is a large part of mercantile transactions a despatch from Baltimore dated March 25 to Women's Wear Daily gives the low down on the way credit is handled by the fur merchants in one of the largest cities of the United States. . .Retail furriers here have not altered their credit facilities in the past year. They report that credit is quite liberal as it is, with up to 24 months to pay.

A spokesman for one outlet said that in some special, big fur sales, when the customer is known credit is extended beyond the 24-month limit. A large department store's representative reported that 90 per cent of fur sales are charged. The reporting majority, which included specialty shops as well as department stores, said 50 per cent of all furs are sold on credit, 40 percent of which is short term, or 90 days or less.

Howard Street specialty stores and department stores play up the extended credit terms in newspaper advertising and train sales-people to mention it, it was reported. Charles Street furriers, however, are a bit more subtle, in most cases, in implying that extended terms exist. By and large, all applicants for credit are screened. But one specialty shop owner pointed out that those who know their credit won't be approved, apparently don't apply. Non-payments account for less than one per cent of the gross volume of business, it was generally reported.

Down payment practices are flexible indeed. Department stores do not require a down payment from old customers. A new account must pay at least 10 per cent. Specialty stores reported that one-third of the purchase price is generally required but this rule is flexible to the point that old customers are excepted. Financing is about equally divided between the stores and banks, according to spokesmen.

Just ten years ago at the Canadian Fur Auction Sales Co., Ltd. sale held in Montreal silver fox and its mutations were very strong, in fact we remember the year quite clearly and how encouraged we all were with the future outlook. It was a big change from 1940 when the market went to pieces due to war breaking out in Europe. Here is a part of the report of the Canadian Fur Auction Sales Company Ltd. for that sale.

Special platinum fox pelts were 74 per cent sold at an average of $67.25; white marked silvers were 75 per cent sold at $42.33; half to three-quarters silvers were 76 per cent sold at $28.71; selected full silvers were 33 per cent sold at $39.63 and full silvers 38 per cent sold at $27.10.

That year and for the years 1947 and 1948 markets were good though not as strong as the 1946 sale. Then they started to tail off badly in 1949 and in 1950 the handwriting was very clear—that the business was doomed. Everyone started to cut down but very few went out of business completely except the small ranchers. We held on hoping that things would change, until finally nearly everyone killed off their foxes and decided the business was a hopeless one to engage in.

At present the majority of the foxes in Canada are owned in Prince Edward Island or at least the majority of those registered are owned here, although Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia still have a certain number. It may be that in future years these beautiful furs will once again become popular and we hope so, because those who have the faith to keep the industry alive will certainly deserve any rewards that may come their way.

With reference to the easy credit system mentioned earlier in these notes, a despatch from Detroit in the latest Women's Wear Daily has the following: "If people can't pay for furs, I'd rather not sell them," one furrier said here speaking of liberalizing credit. This reasoning, also shared by other Detroit furriers, appears to be the reason retailers are opposed to liberalized credit terms for fur purchases. In general, one year is the longest credit allowed, many stores try to enforce a six months credit period. "Once you exceed 10-or 12-month credit terms for furs you're stepping on dangerous ground," said one.

The one store contacted which had relaxed credit restrictions during the last year reported it a successful means of drawing new customers. The store changed from offering six-month to 12-month credit, and also offered a lower down payment. A fur buyer of a higher-priced specialty shop said that the use of liberalized credit in too many places was hurting the fur industry by cheapening furs.

While most stores were unable to give a breakdown of the percentages of furs sold on credit, the few answers received ranged from 5 per cent to 95 per cent on a combination of long and short term credit. If credit is mentioned in advertisements it is usually included in small type. Fur departments of large stores generally follow the regular store policy on credit. One store which does mention liberal terms prominently in ads reported that the customer is urged to use the normal credit arrangements unless she specifically demands the easier advertised terms.

New purchasers of furs applying for credit are turned down, stores revealed. However, several furriers said that if a customer's credit record is shaky, they try to extract as large a down payment as possible. Twenty per cent to one-third down is the average down payment requirement in stores here. Nearly all stores finance their own credit plans.

A desire by customers to avoid paying interest was noted by one furrier whose store does not charge the interest on extended payments, if merchandise should be paid for within six months. An amazing number of customers paid the full amount within the six-month period, and a number paid completely after two or three payments. The percentage of non-payments was one per cent or under for stores contacted.

And now we hear from Milwaukee: Most Milwaukee furriers think it would be a mistake to liberalize credit facilities. Firms here do not believe that credit terms should extend beyond a year and most of them keep it on a 60 to 90 day basis. We have not liberalized credit facilities," the owner of a downtown fur store said. "I don't think we could stay in business if we did. Furthermore, I don't believe in selling credit. I believe in giving 100 per cent value in furs. Carrying charges bring the cost up considerably." Another furrier said he has not liberalized credit because he doesn't handle cheap furs. This furrier said he doesn't want or cater to the type of customer that requires additional credit facilities.

Fougere, acting director of the Technological station at Halifax, N.S., addressed the meeting on all phases of salt fish curing and processing, At five o'clock a dinner was served the assembly by the women's auxilliary of the Tignish Branch of the Canadian Legion. Doucette, Michael McPhee and Charles Gavin.

Alberton Audience Enjoys Comedy

A capacity audience enjoyed the three-act comedy, "Mr. Beane from Lima," presented by players of the Sacred Heart Parish in Alberton the afternoon and evening of March 19. In the afternoon a matinee was given for school children and in the evening adults gave wholehearted support to the cast.

Directed by Miss Thelma Ahearn, the experienced cast gave an excellent performance. Characters are as follows:

Inertia Yadkin the droll, homely, slow maid - Mrs. E.E. Larter.

Blossom Queasy, the Negro cook - Miss Theresa Barrett.

Mrs. Joslyn St. Clair, a high-strung, socially ambitious mother determined to have her own way - Miss Florence Keefe.

Amy St. Clair, her daughter, pretty, with a winsome personality - Miss Carmella Arsenault.

Zoe Dudley, Amy's older sister and in many ways a contrast -Mrs. R.D. MacKinnon.

Johnny Rand, Amy's heart interest - Leo McDougall.

Hiram Skaggs, and his wife, Elviry Skaggs, grandparents of Zoe and Amy, kind, old-fashioned country folks - Dr. G.L. Keefe and Miss Thelma Ahearn.

Mrs. Worthington Belcher, haughty and affected in manner -Mrs. J.C. Profit.

Burley Bixford Beane, a would-be novelist, arrogant and egotistical - J.H. Barrett.

Bob Dudley, Zoe's husband, an engaging personality - R.D. McKinnon.

Mrs. St. Clair has invited Mrs. Belcher and her nephew, Burley Beane, to be her weekend house guests. Mrs. Belcher is considered a member of the local aristocracy. She believes that Mrs. St. Clair is rich. Both are anxious that Amy and Burley should marry. Burley shares in this desire but Amy definitely does not.

Just before her fashionable guests arrive, Mr. and Mrs. Skaggs arrive to make their home with their daughter-in-law, Mrs. St. Clair. They cause her any amount of embarrassment but it is they who save Zoe and Bob from divorce and make it possible for Amy and Johnny to be married immediately instead of waiting until Johnny, complet : his medical studies. These old fashioned, jovial, lovable country folk are really immense as they provide gales of laughter and help to put some clever schemers into their proper places.

Mrs. S.M. Burke and Miss Mary Larter assisted by prompting.

During the evening violin music was furnished by Messrs. Alfred Gill and Joseph MacDonald, accompanied by Mrs. J.A. Noonan. Mr. Henry Myers rendered accordion music and Keith Gavin sang two solos with guitar accompanient by J.H. Barrett.

During an intermission there was a sale of candy and at the close of the evening refreshments were served to the cast and musicians by members of the C.W.L.
