Springhill Survival Will Rest On Amazing Citizens

By DON HOYT
Canadian Press Staff Writer
If Springhill survives the latest in a series of tragedies, the credit will belong to its tough citizenry.

Since November, 1956, each year has brought the rugged coal-mining town in the Cobequid Hills of northwestern Nova Scotia face to face with despair.

Three times miners, their wives and children have met the task of rebuilding broken families and repairing a crushed economy.
