Archbishop O'Brien's Circular.

TO THE CLERGY OF THE DIOCESE PREVIOUS TO LEAVING FOR ROME.

REV. DEAR SIR,—As you are aware, one of the obligations of a Bishop is to visit at certain times, the tomb of the Apostles in Rome, and to personally give an account of his diocese to the supreme pastor of the church on earth. St. Paul is careful to tell us that he went to "Jerusalem to see Peter and stayed with him fifteen days"—(Gal.
I, 18), and this example has been followed by the Bishops of the Catholic Church in every age. Peter lives in his successor, the Roman Pontiff, and the bond of union between him and the Bishops of the world is the same as that between Peter and the other apostles.
The works of man perish, but God's work remains; forms of government change, because they are human institutions, but the government of the church, being of divine origin, is unchangeable in its essential features; ages come and go; men are born and die; sects arise, change their form, split up into innumerable factions, and eventually lose all dogmatic teaching, retaining only the name of Christian and some of its inherited instincts and longings, but the Catholic Church lives on, united in faith, united in obedience, united in sacramental communion. Amidst all the changes of time, St. Peter lives at Rome, and the successors of the apostles go to see him, and remain with him for some days. Thus the church ever gives witness to her identity, and proves herself to those who do not wish to shut their eyes to historic evidence and the light of truth, that she is the one church of the living God, whom all men were commanded to hear and obey. Her unchangeable existence is a perpetual reminder to men of good will of the words of the Apostles—"If any man preach to you a gospel besides that which you have received, let him be anathema."—(Gal. I, 9) It is time now for us who have been placed over this diocese to follow the example of St.
Paul and to visit Peter in the person of his successor, Leo XIII. Hence, we purpose leaving for Rome on the 2nd January next.
We have appointed our Vicar-General, Very Rev. Mgr. Power, administrator of the diocese during our absence.
You will please ask the prayers of your congregation for a safe and prosperous voyage, and also for the wants of our Holy Church. In all masses, when the rubrics permit, the prayer pro navigantibus will be said from the 2nd January until our return.
We must not be ungrateful for the pecuniary needs of the Holy See, despoiled as it has been of its just rights. These rights will be eventually restored, but in the meantime the common father of the faithful must live by the alms of his loving children. A collection, therefore, for the Holy Father will be taken up in all the churches of the diocese in which Mass will be celebrated on the first Sunday of Lent, March 14th, and in the others as soon as possible thereafter. The amount collected to be forwarded without delay to the very rev. administrator.

Commending to your pastoral zeal the spiritual good of the flock entrusted to your care, we beg God to bless your ministry for the salvation of souls.

Archbishop of Halifax

Mr. Gladstone's Thanks.

HIS ADDRESS TO MIDLOTHIAN VOTERS AFTER HIS ELECTION.

The following address was issued by Mr.
Gladstone, to the electors of the County of Midlothian:—

GENTLEMEN,—I now address to you, in writing, the final and fervent thanks which I endeavored to speak on Saturday in the Corn Exchange of Edinburgh, and I do it under circumstances which show that, in getting me 7,579 votes against the 3,243 recorded for my opponent, you were anticipating and expressing the verdict of the country on the Liberal and Tory claims respectively.
The Tory and disguised Tory Journals of London have to-day awakened from their dream of victory to an extended acknowledgment of wide and spreading disaster. They have indeed had much to rest on, but they had something. On Saturday the gross Liberal majority, so far as known, was only two. The returns were then in the main, those of English boroughs, and they showed—Liberal seats 106; Tory seats 117. This Tory majority of nine, such as it was, could not have existed, even with the powerful aid it had derived from the commands of Mr. Parnell, the panic of the Church, and the imposture of Fair Trade, had not folly been pursued in your stipulations having Liberal majorities to the point of handing over the seats to Tory minorities, by dividing the Liberal force under two candidates, instead of concentrating it for one. Thus, even at that point the returns ought to have been—Liberals, 113; Tories, 112.

LONG-HEADED CONSTITUENCIES of Yorkshire and the north, but Tories have also found, to their surprise, that there have all along been rural laborers, and that he is manifesting that life and vigor by voting for those whose unwearied labor gave him the franchise, in despite of most persistent Tory opposition. Not the outworks of Toryism only, but the citadels have been carried, and Wilt, Dorset and Somerset, as well as Lincoln, Norfolk and Suffolk, have rebelled on behalf of liberty and justice, and of that reasonable and manly progress which has done so much for the country, during the last half century, and will do so much for it while supported, as at this moment, by the nation during the next.

NEVER TIRED OF DENOUNCING as disloyal men, the Liberal majority of forty would at this moment have been a hundred.

But the Parnell alliance, the Church panic, the visionary promises of Fair Trade, have all spent their force in the towns. The counties evidently care not for them. The farmers know that they do not owe one good law to the Tories. The gentlemen know what the voters of the Liberal party, who maintained the Corn Laws, resisted their food, kept down their wages, and stunted the enfranchisement of whom they were talking such good use. Again, I ask, how can the Tories stop the contention of liberty and justice which is running through the land, and touching necessarily all points of view? Is there any man who publishes some manifesto? What new alliance can they form? What new panic can they raise?
Is the country empty at last? Is the Tory party quite exhausted? One thing Lord Salisbury cannot do. He cannot attempt a junction with these who are called Moderate Liberals, for they have very lately told us that two things only are real—radicalism and Toryism, and that every thing between them is

A MOCKERY, DELUSION, AND SNARE.

Will he, then, scare the country with some picture of "violent Liberalism"? His efforts will be vain. He cannot get rid of the test of a long experience. That experience has shown that it is the collective Liberalism, the genera-sense of Liberals, which has guided the counsels of the party from the days of the first Reform Bill until now, and so it will be still. The result is before the constituencies in the reforms of fifty years, and the last, not least, of them, is the country franchise. It is not the Church, nor the nobles, nor the landlords, nor rich men, nor the idle and luxurious men, that have done the work of the last few days. It was said of Inkerman that it was emphatically the soldiers' battle. I say of this election in the counties that it is emphatically, and in a fuller sense than ever it has heretofore, the people's election.

You may say, gentlemen, that this letter is more an English than a Scottish one. But the union between the counties which we love is at this moment being more and more closely drawn by the manifold deeds of the population of the English counties, and there is not one of the 7,579 Midlothian Liberals of Friday, who has not labored for the consummation of their work, bid them heartily God-speed. I remain, gentlemen, your devotedly obliged and obedient servant, W. E. GLADSTONE.

Mr. Gladstone's Programme.

The latest advices from London state that Mr. Gladstone has definitely rejected the moderate counsels of most of his colleagues, and has determined to force the fighting against the Conservatives at the very threshold of the new Parliament. It is said that he will do this by moving a vote of want of confidence in the Government on the first day of the session. He expects to be able to arrange matters with the Parnellites so as to have a majority sufficient to unseat the Government, even though there may be some Whig defections from his own ranks. It is also stated that the members of Mr. Gladstone's late Cabinet are greatly divided in their views of the wisdom of this programme. Lords Hartington and Spencer are stalwart Whigs, oppose it. Messrs.
Trevelyan and Goschen are hesitating between two opinions, but will probably fall into line. Sir William Vernon Harcourt approves the scheme, but the only really hearty approbation it receives is from the Radical leaders, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and Sir Charles Dilke. If sufficient pledges are given to Mr. Parnell to bring his phalanx to Mr. Gladstone's support, and if the Whigs, as a rule stick to him, Mr.
Gladstone can out the Conservatives, resume office himself, and retain it during the pleasure of the Parnellites. If the Whigs desert to the Conservative ranks in any considerable numbers a deadlock is certain. In that case the leaders will probably agree to confine legislation to passing the estimates and dissolve Parliament at the beginning of summer.
