others. He saw in her something which led his mind back to the past, and in the words she had spoken, wild and incoherent as they were, he saw a key to something which he believed had its origin in stern reality.

'Polly,' he said, laying his hand upon her arm, and speaking in a tone as soft and winning as he could assume, 'did you ever know a woman named Marsella Paul?'

The beldam started, and for a moment the fire of her small black eyes burned like coals.

'Did you know her?' she fairly shrieked, while Belinda started with affright, at the harsh, ungenial sound of the cracked voice.

'I did know her well,' Matthew answered.

'So did I know her. She was my own mother.'

'That could not have been.'

'What could not have been?'

'Marsella Paul could not have been your mother.'

'But she was—my own mother. Ha, ha, ha. To think I'm a child of earth like yourself. But I aren't. I was born in heaven. My mother was driven up there in a storm. A mountain reached up there, and she was on the top of it—a mountain of water! You wont deny that.'

'No, Polly. But don't you think that you are Marsella Paul.'

'Me? Me own mother?'

'But think a little. Were you not once named Marsella?'

'Never! You'd make me out to be my own mother. Try that again and I'll tell. I'll tell all you did years agone, when you had a great army. I know—I know when you drove 'em into the sea. I know for I was here!'

In a few moments the old man put the question in a different form, but he could get no satisfactory answer. The old woman's mind ran off upon the subject of the British troops, and she accused Matthew of being a British general in disguise, and upon this subject her thoughts ran until dinner was ready. She was asked to sit up to the table, but she refused. Yet she was hungry, and she took some bread and fish and ate it by the fire, all the while talking or rather muttering, with herself, about the British, and occasionally about storms at sea.

After Belinda had cleared away the table the poor woman gathered her garments about her and arose from her seat.

'You will not leave us now,' the host said.

'I must,' the woman replied, 'for there's danger in the country, and I must overcome it. You have not heard that the British were here, and that the tories are going to be married to them. But it's only a left hand marriage. The tories'll be but servants after all. Ha, ha, he, funny isn't it?'

'It is funny,' returned Matthew. 'But you need not leave us now. It is bleak and cold, and you need rest. Come—remain with us for a while. You shall find a welcome here.'

For a moment there came a gleam of gratitude over the woman's face, and the light of her dark eye burned more softly; but the same wild look quickly returned, and with a spasmodic laugh she turned towards the door.

'If I were of earth born,' she said, 'I might need rest; but those born in heaven never tire. Yet I'll bless thee sometime for the kindness you've done me now. You've entertained an angel.'

With these words the woman opened the door, but ere she had passed out she caught the fixed gaze of Belinda and stopped.

'Sweet one,' she whispered, while a strange shade passed over her face, 'I know you. You came from heaven with me. Don't you remember?—sh! Do not fear me. Why should you? Do you think I would harm you?'

'O, no,' quickly returned Belinda, shrinking in spite of herself. 'I know you would not harm me.'

'Of course I would not. But don't you remember when we were up together? You must remember it. I know you are the very one. Don't be afraid. I will not harm you.'

The woman moved nearer to Belinda as she spoke, and finally laid her thin, dark hand upon her head. There was something so earnest, so eager, in the beldam's look, that the fair girl seemed fixed by it, and she did not move.

'You aren't your own mother,' the strange woman continued. 'Of course you aren't, and no more can I be. Marsella Paul was my mother in heaven and my name is Polly Poll. You see Paul is the heaven name, and Poll is of earth. So your mother's name was Paul Marsella, and your name must be Mercy Poll. Aren't it?'

'Not quite,' tremblingly replied Belinda, hardly able to restrain a smile which the ridiculousness of the woman's remarks called up.

'Yes, it is, and one of these days you shall find it so. Give me your blessing.'

The beldam sank down upon her knees as she spoke, and bowed her head. Belinda hesitated, for she hardly realized what was meant.

'Bless me, angel,' whispered the strange being. 'O, bless me ere I go out again into the cold world. I shall never forget you—never.'

Tremblingly the maiden placed her fair hand upon the woman's head, and in a faint voice she uttered;

'God bless you—bless you ever—and so will I pray.'

The old woman arose, and big tears were in her eyes. A moment she gazed into Belinda's face, and then, with her finger's point pressed upon the centre of her brow she muttered;

'Once—O, 'twas a long, long while ago—I knew you well. We were both young then. I was just your age. We were mates in those times long passed. O, you remember it?'

Belinda at that moment caught her father's eye, and he silently bade her to answer in the affirmative.

'Yes, yes, I remember,' answered the maiden.

'You do! You do!' poor Polly cried, vehemently. 'O, I knew you would. How could you help it? Don't you remember that dark, dismal night—that night when the wind howled like a mad wolf, and the great mountains of water came to bury our mothers up—and how they went to heaven, and then we were born there? you and I on the same day? And then don't you remember how we came down to earth together—you and I—long agone. O, we were child[ren] then. You remember?'

Again Belinda looked towards her father, and she found him as pale as death, and trembling violently: but he made a sign as before, and she gave an affirmative answer.

'I knew you would remember,' resumed the maniac, 'for we were so young and fresh then. But I am forgetting,' she continued, as the wild expression came once more to her face. 'The British are upon us, and danger broods over our land. The tyrant is here, but fear him not while I remain on earth, for my arm shall be outstretched over this house and all that in it dwell. God be and abide with ye now and forever.'

Thus she spoke, deeply and solemnly, and then she turned again to the door. She was urged to stay, but she would not. She passed out, and in a few moments more her steps were heard upon the snow crust. A few moments the old fisherman remained in his seat, and then he arose and seized his hat and went out. Belinda went into the little room which looked out upon the back walk (the winter's snow had so blocked up the front yard that it was not used now), and saw her father just laying his hand upon the beldam's shoulder. She did not stop to watch—she only saw that he had gone to speak with their strange guest—and then she returned.

'Who can that woman be?' the maiden uttered, as Rolin drew her down by his side.

'I cannot imagine,' returned the youth.

'But do you suppose she ever talks to others as she talked to me?'

'I think it very likely.'

'But why should my father be so moved?'

'Really I cannot tell. But he may explain when he returns. She is a strange woman.'

'I have heard of her often.'

'So have I. She has been around here several years, and she has been the same during the whole time. She is perfectly harmless, and as I have been informed generally talks about the great storm which took her mother to heaven. She thinks the gale really lifted her parent up to the mansions of eternal bliss, and that she was born there. It must be that she has at some time been cast away at sea, and that some injury, or fright, then received, turned her brain. But let this pass until your father returns, and in the meantime, let us talk of the other thing that has this day happened. O, Belinda, you know not the happiness that dwells now in my heart. Henceforth I am to live for a new and holy purpose—to find joy and peace and rest for thee. You have seen my love, Belinda—you have known that I loved you for a long while. Is it not so?'

'I have hoped so, Rolin,' the generous girl replied, looking up into her lover's face with a happy smile.

'Ah, sweet one, such hopes are generally based upon pretty sound foundation. And yet you speak truly, for though I felt sure you loved me, yet I have not until now been fully blessed.'

Before Belinda could make any reply her father entered. His face wore a troubled look, and without noticing his child or her lover, he removed his hat, and resumed his seat upon the settee. For some minutes he sat there, with his brow resting upon his hands, and his gaze directed towards the smoke which was curling up the mouth of the chimney. At length he seemed to remember that there were others in the room, for he suddenly started up, and gazed upon his companions. He saw how eager they looked, and of course he knew how much they had to arouse their curiosity.

'I know you wonder at what has passed, my children,' he said, 'but I could not explain at all if I should try. That woman looks like one whom I knew long years ago, and who was with me in the darkest hour that ever gloomed over the face of humanity. But she cannot remember it—or, at least, she cannot be made to see it as it was. I may be mis——, no, I cannot be. It is she—it must be. O, why cannot she speak! Why cannot the deep mystery of her soul be freed! Would that some kind power could unlock the mind that holds the past so close shut up! I cannot tell you all now; but at some time you shall know it. It is of little moment, of no moment save to me. You will not blame me. I may see her again—the poor crazy woman, I mean—and she may be more calm. You will not blame me now?'

'Not at all, father,' quickly returned Rolin. 'Think not of us.'

'Bless you, Rolin—bless you. And I know Belinda will not blame her father.'

The maiden stepped quickly forward and threw her arms about her father's neck, and, as she kissed him, she said:

'If there's anything unpleasant in the past, forget it, for surely we have enough in the future for both hope and fear. Joy in our household—fear for our country. But think of it no more, my dear father; or, if you do be sure we shall not pry into the burden of your thoughts.'

The old man kissed his sweet child and soon afterwards the conversation turned upon the subject of England's king, and England's soldiers in America. Yet, ever and anon old Matthew's thoughts would turn back upon the past, and while, at such moments, he was gloomy and sad, his companions could not but wonder what could be the nature of the secret.

THE ROAD TO HEALTH AND LONG LIFE

Holloway's Ointment.

Its Searching & Healing Properties are known and recognized throughout the World.

The number of years this invaluable Ointment has stood the test of public opinion, (and the longer known the better appreciated) is a testimony of itself more convincing than anything that could be written in praise of its truly wonderful healing properties. In the cure of bad legs, bad breasts, sores, wounds, and ulcers, its effect is marvellous. For ring-worm, scald-head, scrofula, and diseases of the scalp generally, there is no remedy to be compared to it. When assiduously rubbed upon the skin (previously well bathed in warm water this Ointment is quickly absorbed into the system and cleanses, in its passage, every part to which it is applied

Glandular Swellings, Mumps Bronchitis, Quinsey, Sore Throats and Diptheria.

In any of the above diseases, immediate and permanent relief is obtained by effectually rubbing this detergent Ointment, twice a day, upon the neck, chest and back. Its acts upon the very mainsprings of life; for through the glands pass all new matter required for the body's reparation and all old particles detrimental to its preservation. The Ointment used conjointly with Holloway's Pills, will act so searchingly and certainly as to effect cures in the most hopeless cases

Rheumatism, Lumbago, Contracted and Stiff Joints.

Many thousands of martyrs from the above complaints have found life almost unsupportable; yet if Holloway's Ointment be briskly and perseveringly rubbed upon the parts affected, ease may be safely guaranteed, especially if the pores of the skin be previously opened by fomentations with warm water. The gross humors require expulsion from the system; it is therefore necessary to have recourse to Holloway's admirable Pills, which, by purifying and strengthening the system, greatly assist the operation of the Ointment and facilitate and confirm they cure

Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, and Ulcerations of all kinds.

There is no medicinal preparation in the world which may be so thoroughly relied upon, in the treatment of the above ailments, as Holloway's Ointment. Nothing can be so simple or safe as the manner in which it is applied, or its action on the body, both locally and constitutionally. The Ointment, rubbed around the part affected, enters the pores just as salt enters meat. It quickly penetrates to the source of the evil and drives it from the system

Erysipelas and Scrofulous Sores

In all irritations of the skin, sores, ulcers, burn or scrofulous enlargements of any kind, Holloway's Ointment presents a ready and easy means of cure. It manifests a peculiar power in restraining inflammation, removing stagnation, cooling the heated blood, and checking all acrimonious and unhealthy discharge

Diseases attendant on Childhood.

Diseases incident to early life fall more under the management of the mother than the medicine man. Holloway's Ointment should therefore be regarded by her as a "Household Treasure," as it never fails in bringing out the rash in measles and scarlatina; and for the removal of all skin diseases its effect is miraculous. In cases of whooping cough and croup, this invaluable Ointment should be rubbed twice a day upon the throat and chest, and the youngest invalid will derive therefrom the most soothing relief. Two or three of Holloway's famous Pills, reduced to a powder, will augment the curative powers of the Unguent

Both the Ointment and Pills should be used in the following cases:

Bad Legs	Corns (soft)	Rheumatism
Bad Breasts	Cancers	Scalds
Burns	Contracted and Stiff Joints	Sore Nipples
Bunions	Elephantiasis	Sore Throats
Bite of Moschetoes and Sand Flies	Fistulas	Skin Diseases
Coco-bay	Gout	Scurvy
Chiego-foot	Glandular Swellings	Sore Heads
Chilblains	Lumbago	Tumours
Chapped Hands	Piles	Ulcers
		Wounds
		Yaws

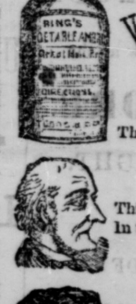
GRAY HAIR.

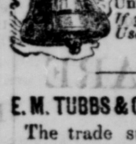


This is the AMBROSIA that Ring made.

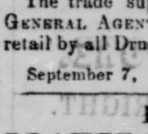
This is the Cure that lay
In the AMBROSIA that Ring made.

This is the Man who was bald and gray,
Who now has raven locks, they say.
He used the Cure that lay
In the AMBROSIA that Ring made.

This is the Maiden, handsome and gray,
Who married the man once bald and gray,
Who now has raven locks, they say.
He used the AMBROSIA that Ring made.



This is the Parson, who, by the way,
Married the maiden, handsome and gay,
To the man once bald and gray,
But who now has raven locks, they say,
Because he used the Cure that lay
In the AMBROSIA that Ring made.



This is the Bell that rings away
To arouse the people sad and gay
Unto this fact, which here does lay—
If you would not be bald or gray,
Use the AMBROSIA that Ring made.
