Workers Quit Nickel Town As Strike Ties Up Output

THOMPSON, Man. (CP) — The first strike ever to hit this northern Manitoba Nickel mining town has milked its 8,300-population of perhaps 3,000 residents as nickel workers leave for greener pastures to the south.

Members of the United Steelworkers of America (CLC) employed by the International Nickel Company walked out Aug. 12, crippling the Inco's $185,000,000 operations here. The lure of Winnipeg, 400 miles to the south, has drawn many of the strikers away.

There are no signs of renewed negotiations. The last comment from Inco officials concerning the strike by 1,750 members of Steelworkers Local 6166 put the onus squarely on the Steelworkers.

"We have given them our offer for a settlement and they have rejected it," Personnel Manager D. E. Munn said.

ECONOMY AFFECTED

As residents leave the town, the economy suffers. About 75 businesses affected had laid off most of their staff before the strike was a week old.

The price reduction that has followed the sudden emigration has caused annoyance in some quarters. Ken McMaster, president of the Steelworkers' local, said:

"Suddenly groceries can be bought at Winnipeg prices; apartments are reduced to $120 from $140 a month and rail fares are down considerably.

"It pretty well took the strike to get this for the community and maybe if the strike lasted for a year we would ge decent conditions here."

DIFFERENT VIEW

However, one supermarket manager denied that the strike was responsible for price cuts.

"This started quite a while before the strike. The price for sugar went down and freights went down. That affected many foods."

Grocery bills are paid by union vouchers: $12 a week for single men, $16 a week for married men and an extra $4 a week for each child in a family.

The strike climaxed months of negotiations between Inco and Steelworkers spokesmen. The union July 19 rejected a conciliation report handed down by the provincial government.

Brewing Industry Growing More Rapidly In Maritimes

By ERROL WEAVER

HALIFAX (CP) — Executives of the brewing and distilling business say their industry is growing "more rapidly in the Maritimes than anywhere else in Canada."

They point to the opening of a new brewery, another under planning, production this October and a distillery engaged in a major expansion project.

The latest addition to the Maritime brewing industry is the $4,000,000 Moosehead Breweries Limited plant in neighboring Dartmouth. The new brewery, described as one of the most modern in Canada, has a capacity of 100,000 barrels a year. It went into production last month.

Built on a 23-acre site, it will employ about 60 persons with an annual payroll of more than $300,000.

The Dartmouth operation complements Moosehead's existing brewery at Lancaster, N.B., and brings the organization's total capacity to approximately 250,000 barrels annually.

Meanwhile, in Lancaster, N.B., work is progressing on a new Oland and Son Limited Brewery. The plant, to cost almost $4,000,000, is scheduled to go into operation next spring. It will replace a smaller brewery now operated by the company in Saint John, N.B. The Oland firm also operates two breweries in Halifax.

At Truro, Nova Scotia's first winery is under construction, with a production target date of Oct. 1. This $500,000 plant, an offshoot of Andres Wines Limited, of Port Moody, B.C., will produce berry and fruit wines using Nova Scotia fruit.

At Bridgetown, N.S. a $500,000 expansion is under way at Acadian Distillers Ltd. a 22,000-square foot, nine-tier whisky-maturing building is being constructed as the first stage of a long - range development program.

The expansion will triple Acadian's storage capacity to more than 1,000,000 gallons. The plant produces a full range of spirits.

The sudden surge in the brewing and distilling industries in the Maritimes is attributed to a number of factors, including more liberal liquor laws and an increase in the number of liquor outlets.

BALL, CHAIN BECOME REAL

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)—Everyone laughed when the groom showed up at the wedding with a 25-pound ball and chain locked to his leg.

The guests were still laughing an hour after the wedding here when it was announced that someone had thrown the keys to the ball and chain lock into Biscayne Bay.

But it wasn't so funny to the groom, Randy Goranson, 22, and his bride, Pam Nichens, 21. It was delaying their planned honeymoon trip to Nassau.

Finally, a hotel maintenance man freed the groom of his ball and chain after an hour's work with a hacksaw.

$1 For Seeds Saves Fortune Of Farm Family

WINNIPEG (CP) — As a farmer, 82-year-old Dr. Frank L. Skinner was a failure.

He saved the family fortunes, however, with $1 he spent on a packet of seeds in the 1930s.

Today the name Skinner, the Dropmore, Man., nurseries he maintains, and the plants he has developed are world famous.

Dr. Skinner began his nursery enterprise near Dropmore, 250 miles northwest of here, and his 70-acre establishment is rated among the world's leading plant experimental stations.

Skinner-bred trees are found from Colorado to the Arctic, and New Zealand and the Azores soon will have shipments from Dropmore.

He has been trading seeds and plants with other horticulturists for years and periodically receives specimens from Russia, Manchuria, Czechoslovakia, Sweden, Switzerland and other countries with a climate similar to Manitoba's.

He came to Canada in 1905 from Aberdeenshire, Scotland, and maintains his family's tradition of having a Skinner horticulturist in every generation for 200 years.

In 1949 he was awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws from the University of Manitoba in recognition of his experimental work with prairie plants. He has been awarded the Cory Cup by the British Horticultural Society for the outstanding plant produced in the British Commonwealth—the Maxwell lily.

Dr. Skinner remained a bachelor until he was 65, and today with five children under 15 years of age, he is one of the few in Canada to be receiving both his old age pension and family allowance cheques.

Caribou Herd Settles Down In Maine Home

AUGUSTA, Me. (AP) — Maine's herd of caribou, transplanted from Newfoundland, appears from all reports to have settled into its new habitat in fine fashion, a fish and game department spokesman said here.

The director of the Franklin Park Zoo in Boston reported Thursday the safe arrival of four caribou calves, also from Newfoundland, and the Maine official had cheerful news for him.

Maine has had several caribou in the game farm at Grey for several years, information director William Mincher said, and the animals have thrived in captivity. The Boston zoo official said theirs would be the only zoo in the U.S. to have caribou.

Newfoundland traded 24 of its caribou last fall for a supply of partridge from Maine. The animals were brought to Mount Katahdin in Baxter State Park by truck and most of them were flown by navy helicopter to the mountain.

That was in December and except for one animal which died during the air transfer, there have been no reports of deaths since.

The bidding:

Opening lead—five of spades.

One of the questions I am often asked is: "Where do you get the hands from that you write about?"

The answer is that most of them are actual occurrences. They either happened to me or to someone else and in one way or another I heard about them. Sometimes names and places are stated in the column. In such cases, the facts are exactly as represented.

But there are times when I have to change a hand a little in order to get a certain point across. If I failed to do this, the hand would become pointless and not worth writing about.

Take today's hand, for instance. There isn't much to it, the way it stands. South gets to three notrump and West leads a spade. East takes the ace and returns a spade. Declarer collects five diamonds, two spades, two hearts and a club, thus making four notrump in what appears to be an absolutely routine hand.

I can't report such a dull hand in a column, but yet there is an important principle involved that demands discussion. So in order to get the principle across and convince the reader that declarer misplayed the hand, I change one card. What I do is give East the three of diamonds in exchange for the three of hearts.

Now if South plays the hand as described, he goes down, making only eight tricks. He gets punished for having played the hand incorrectly.

Declarer's proper play after winning the spade at trick two is to lead a diamond to the queen and a low diamond back. He does this to protect himself against a 4-1 diamond division. This safety play assures the contract.

I wouldn't dare publish the hand as it is shown in the diagram because I would have very tough time convincing my readers that a declarer who makes three notrump is not a skillful than a declarer who makes four notrump.
