"Sir John is Dead."

BY J. K. FORAN, OTTAWA.

A hush has fallen on Canadian land.
A dark cloud hovers in Canadian skies—
From end to end, from ocean strand to strand,
On verdant vales, o'er mountains towering grand,
An ashen veil of awful sorrow lies;
From out that silence, with an accent dread,
A voice proclaims—"The Grand Old Chief is dead!"

A hush has fallen on Canadian land—
Thy very waves, Atlantic, seem to cease
Their roar, and kiss with grief our eastern strand,
While broad Pacific's billows lordly grand,
Creep softly up, as if some voice cried "Peace!
Disturb not thus a nation's solemn grief—
She weeps to-night her grand, dead, veteran chief!"

Like to some grief bowed creature with soft tread
Moving all in silence through death's dim hall,
The Ottawa's deep current onward sped
Noiseless, as if 'twere dumb with mighty dread,
O'er it, as o'er the nation, hangs the pall—
And on the trees, by Earnscliffe, each leaf
Rustles the words—"He's dead—the great, good Chief."

"He's dead;" 'twas heard at the far Rockies' feet,
Along Superior, o'er St. Lawrence tide—
Down by the sea, these words each sad ear greet;
'Twas spoken here beside his vacant seat;
'Twas echoed from the Chamber's every side,
And through those Gothic corridors they sped—
"Hush, Canada, and weep—Sir John is dead!"

Throughout the Empire's mighty length and breadth,
These words were heard; and from the sovereign Queen
Down to the humblest soul, with deep, sad breath,
A million lips proclaimed the news of death.
And as the stars in yonder concave seen,
Countless are they whose eyes salt tears have shed.
Whose hearts were stilled to hear "Sir John is dead."

Silence now broods throughout a mourning land,
Then let the muse be silent like the rest,
His monument is Canada, and grand
And great his deathless name shall stand
Upon that shaft her first and best!
And he shall live, till Time's last hour is sped
In history's shrine—He sleeps—Sir John's not dead!

Oh! Canada—Oh! youthful nation fair!
Advance, rise higher, and expand in might—
'Twas his desire, his hope, his constant prayer,
For such his work of life and ceaseless care
To see thee glorious in the Nation's sight!
For such the rugged path of strife he trod!
He is not dead, though 'neath Canadian sod,
He is not dead, he lives for aye with God!

Another Tribute to Sir John.

The Rev. Dr. Hunter, of Toronto, preaching in the Dominion Methodist Church Ottawa, made a touching reference to the dead statesman. He said:

"To me it is always a privilege and a joy to stand in this pulpit, but to-day that joy is chastened by the reflection that we meet under the shadow of a great sorrow. A sorrow which at this moment is varied in the utterances of the pulpits of the great empire of which we form a part, and in the subdued and earnest prayers of the many thousands of worshippers now assembled for praise and prayer, and the recognition of God as the Sovereign Disposer of all events. A sorrow which shadows the very throne of the empire and rests heavily on the widowed heart of the royal lady whom we are pround to call our gracious and beloved Queen. Yea, a sorrow which is shared with us by all the civilized nations of the earth to which the electric wires have already conveyed the sad intelligence that the First Minister of Her Majesty in this Dominion, and one of the greatest statesmen of the age has passed from earth into the world which no mortal eye can see. I cannot refrain from laying my tribute of respect and admiration on the casket in which will be enshrined all that is mortal of the late Premier of my native land. And I do so the more readily because in the exercise of my conscientious convictions I have found occasion to dissent from his views and those of many others on a great question which seemed to me to strike at the very roots of justice and equality which lie at the basis of our civil and religious institutions. But let me say here and now that I have never for one moment questioned his past ability, but have looked upon him as the most gifted statesman that Canada has ever produced. I have never questioned his devotion and loyalty to Britain, to Britain's Queen and to British institutions. A loyalty that I cherish in my own heart so fervently that my prayer to God is that no flag but the one which he loved so fondly may ever float over my house and over my grave. I never questioned the unselfishness of this heroic devotion and loyalty. He loved and labored and sacrificed the great wealth which might have been his for the love which he bore to Canada, and for the ambition to see her grow up strong and vigorous and prosperous as an integral part of the British Empire. Of his generosity and kindness of heart and courtesy to the humblest citizen of the land I need not speak in this presence. Sir John Macdonald was a firm believer in the great truths and doctrines of our common Christianity, and was not ashamed to make public confession of that belief at the Communion table of the church of which he was a member, and in this church, in the presence of the great congregations which thronged its services, when hundreds of hearts were open to receive the Lord Jesus. The living form and the living voice shall be seen and heard no more on earth, but the principles and sentiments of patriotism and loyalty, of which he was the distinguished representative, shall live in the hearts of the many thousands who mourn for him to-day as for the loss of a father. Let us be true to God, to Queen and country, to our fellows and to ourselves. Let us pray God that he may raise up men of pure minds to guide the destiny of our young Dominion. Let us in Christian sympathy and tenderness remember in our prayers the stricken hearted lady who mourns in widowhood to-day, and who for so many years has been a helpmate to her distinguished husband; and let us now find comfort and courage in the hymn selected for the opening of our service, "God is the refuse of his saints when storms of sharp distress invade."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Roads and Bridges.

SIR,—Now that the new government is in power to transact the business of the country, we hope no time will be lost in repairing our roads and bridges, which have been so sadly neglected since the government was formed. The Commissioner of Public Works has made a new departure from the usual course, heretofore in vogue, in reference to that important branch of the public service. Instead of making the necessary repairs in the early part of the season, sufficient to make the roads and bridges passable, the new official has issued circulars to supervisors, not to expend moneys in any part of the country without orders from his department. Just think how absurd, for a supervisor to inform Mr. McLean that there was a bad rut, or hole, at a certain bridge, and that if he would be pleased to allow him to expend a few dollars in that locality; it would be beneficial to the travelling public, and would be the means of saving three times the amount a little later on. This is the import of the circular, which the new Commissioner has circulated among the supervisors; consequently, the latter officials are powerless to ameliorate the condition of the roads and bridges, which, owing to the unusually heavy rains and storms of last fall, are considerably worse this season than for many years past. Had the supervisors been allowed to make the necessary repairs on parts of the roads most needing such—as was customary for them to do under the late government we would be able to travel without danger of getting dumped into a ditch, and, besides, it would be a considerable saving to the rate-payers when the time of selling the roads and bridges in summer would take place. The present government will find that by adopting such a "penny-wise and pound foolish" policy, they are not likely to make many political converts to gritism.

KING'S COUNTY.

Horse Notes.

SIR,—In answer to "Horse Notes" in the Island Farmer of May 28th 1891, I see the owners of Glasnick Blend, Clydesdale Stallion, complain of an impression got abroad as to birth and breeding and ask the county to set the matter at rest. The country does not see any foundation to rest on. The people consider that the tide of public spirit would not have much trouble in washing such foundations as that away. A better foundation would be to put before the public in the Farmer and other papers his certificate of registry in the stud book of the Clydesdale Society of Great Britain and Ireland with Mr. Arch. Macneill, age, name, ect., thereon signed by himself; and after all this if the Glasnick Blend can represent as good families of Clydesdale horses as the Trojan and the Knight of Ardgowan, the public will consider the Glasnick Blend a Clydesdale horse in breeding. I as a green hand should no more think of buying a pure bred horse of any breed without his papers with him than I should think of buying a farm without a deed or lease. The people of the Island consider that pure bred horses, and young ones at that, from the old country would be more benefit to the Island than old worn out horses or second handed young horses from Upper Canada. Hoping that the company will have the kindness to put before the public all they have asked for for their own mutual benefit, and by the time they have done that they may reckon on knowing the letter A on the horse business.

Would the owners of the Roaxby please comply with the same request and improve their education in horse business.
