An Important Omission

Not having made much headway with American leaders in their efforts to bring about a cessation of nuclear tests—on Russia's terms—Soviet leaders have now turned their attention to Congress.

There is, of course, something to be said for the assertion, from a legal standpoint, President Eisenhower can negotiate with the Soviet leader to his heart's content and even enter into an agreement for ending nuclear tests.

There is one little thing, however, which Ivestia forgot to mention in its venture into American law, namely, that while Congress can and frequently does disagree with the President on matters of foreign policy, it would be more than their lives were worth for members of the "Supreme Soviet" to dispute an edict of their Government.

Conflicts of Opinions

No wonder members of the United States Congress cannot agree with President Eisenhower or with one another on the contents of the Foreign Air Program! The people themselves and the organizations which represent them have so many divergent views on the subject.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, a powerful organization, especially in the Mid-West farm belt, blamed Government agencies for what it called "using every maneuver possible to perpetuate a large foreign aid program."

The Americans for Democratic Action wanted the program to be fitted in with the United Nations and administered by agencies of that organization. This view has been brought forward many times in the past, but it has never appealed to either the Congress or the Administration.

gress or the Administration adopt a plan and adhere to it? In this country, once a program is made official by the Government, very little public complaint is heard about it.

The Law And Society

Some excerpts from an address delivered by Chief Justice Patrick Kerwin of the Supreme Court of Canada at the annual Law Day celebration of Boston University deserve every little bit of publicity that can be afforded them.

On the importance of law and the rights of individuals: "The law is part of the warp and woof of our civilization. Without rules our society could not exist."

On the identification of law with community interests: "We (lawyers) must be concerned with the welfare of the people, because it is only by that kind of interest that the members of the profession will be able to remove the mistaken idea that we are a class apart."

On the need to interest the public in legal procedures (referring to the appeal by Chief Justice Vanderbilt of New Jersey for the assistance of men of goodwill in efforts to improve the operations of the courts): "This is a clarion call to recast old systems that now may be creaking at the joints."

EDITORIAL NOTES

It is rumoured that former P.C. leader George Drew will become Canada's High Commissioner in London. It would be difficult to think of a more satisfactory appointment.

To Grand Falls, White Bay, Labrador belongs the distinction of reporting the first election of a candidate. This was a little surprising, for the riding is probably the most scattered in all Canada.

The Gallup Poll has been proved wrong again. If this sort of thing keeps up, it won't be long before everyone will agree with Mr. Harry S. Truman that the experts know no more about the fortunes of political battles than anyone else.

Just before the election, Professor Allan Fraser, Liberal candidate in St. John's East, said he was in favour of "Opposition members being elected"—but not in Newfoundland. Voters in his riding responded by electing his P.C. opponent, a 25-year-old salesman.

Evangelist Billy Graham says that "Russia is ripe for the greatest religious revival in history" and that he would like to go there "without any strings attached."

A report from Detroit says that in future less attention will be paid to power and speed in the manufacture of automobiles and more to safety, reliable and comfortable transportation. It is a change long overdue.

If the housewives generally subscribe to the designation which a Regina woman gave herself when filling out a school record form, husbands have at long last been given authority in their homes. This lady gave her occupation as "housewife" and her employer, as "husband."

The Cost of Living Spiral

By Patrick Nicholson

Two interesting announcements just made by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics here deserve to be studied together. The first discloses that wages and salaries have reached a new high level across Canada.

Suppose you were one of the hundreds of thousands of Canadians, setting out anew on a career in civil life after the war, who plan to save to buy security for your family in the event of your death.

Belief in the essential soundness of Canada's position and firm confidence in the outcome of the Imperial Economic Conference, were strikingly evident at all meetings of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, reports Major C. L. MacKay of Bruce Stewart and Company, who returned yesterday from attending the meetings.

The Summerside School Board conferred with Professor Lloyd Shaw, who is in charge of Normal Training at P.W. College, on Friday evening on the standard to be adopted for the new secondary school. Professor Shaw dealt with the curriculum and the standard of examinations.

ROADS AND GAS TAX

Sir,—Re the new tax on gas, I must say it is ridiculous for the poor farmer and fisherman to be overtaxed like this, and as for the trucker he may as well take his truck off the road altogether.

I would like to know who led the Premier to believe that the farmers in this Province realize that the increase is necessary.

They certainly don't realize it east of Souris with a road such as we have now, and it looks as if this road is going to be left impassable until midsummer again this year.

I am referring to that so-called pavement between Souris and Red Point. The people just do not travel on it. They go by dog paths through the woods. It takes about five gallons of gas and two quarts of oil to go by road, and one would be fortunate to get the summer out of a new set of tires with the deep sharp bumps.

Farmers in our section sure require a better reason for the gas increase than good roads.

Help In Planning Restricted Diet

By Herman N. Bundesen, M.D.

Low-sodium milk may be just the thing those of you on a salt-restricted diet may need to round out your meals.

WHAT IT IS Low-sodium milk is liquid whole milk from which more than 90 per cent of the normal sodium content has been removed.

Although this results in doubling the ordinary amount of potassium, it is still within the safe range as far as adults are concerned.

It is a difficult job for a doctor to plan a sodium-restricted diet which is tasty and high in protein, yet low in sodium content.

Many physicians recommend that milk be omitted entirely or at least that the quantity consumed be kept to a minimum. This makes it difficult for the patient to obtain the needed amounts of calcium, protein and riboflavin.

VALUE OF MILK In fact, the American Medical Association's Council of Foods and Nutrition recently pointed out that the necessity of restricting consumption of meat and other protein foods, which contain large amounts of sodium, makes the potential value of milk even more evident.

The council terms low-sodium milk "very useful" in planning sodium-restricted diets.

This type of diet usually is recommended to counteract the body's fluid retention for such conditions as cirrhosis of the liver, congestive heart failure, high blood pressure, toxemias of pregnancy and in certain kidney diseases.

The Poet's Corner

IN THE GREEN VAULT October, like a shrewd bank president. Seized last summer's assets—all the gold hot days pressed down like folding money.

In the dank treasure box of Fall. Winter-long the summer sun was growing. In wet thin spinneys, under snow, in logs and crannies. Wild March brooks began.

In April, payment time was due. In May the treasure's green compounded interest. Pressed against the bonds, and the coffers burst. And all the flags of spring, Ran up, declaring dividends.

Sault Ste. Marie, traditional fishing-ground of the Ojibway Indians, would, from a tourist point of view be much improved by the inclusion of an Indian village within reach of the city. Whitefish Island, a beauty spot between the two Saulls would be ideal for such a purpose, since it was probably the site of one of the original, Indian encampments. It was certainly included in their reservation and is said to contain a burial ground.—Sault Ste. Marie Star
