Soldiering Father And Sons Had Get-Together In Cyprus

By ALAN WALKER

NICOSIA (CP)—A father and two sons served with Canadian forces on Cyprus for a month before they could get together. An officer arranged a reunion and gave all three a chauffeur for the day so they could tour the island.

Guardsmen John Bonvie, 25, and his brother Tom, 24, both of Pictou, N.S., came here with the Canadian Guards. Meanwhile their father Pte. Leo Bonvie, 49, a driver in the Canadian Army Service Corps, applied to make Cyprus his last posting before retirement next year.

Finally he arrived. John was stationed high in the Kyrenia mountains north of here. Tom was in the Kyrenia foothills with another company in the same battalion. A month later the three shook hands and said hello.

There's a fourth member of the family on Cyprus. He's Pte. Henry Munro, 25, Leo's nephew. Leo's third and eldest son was in the army too.

"Nova Scotia really seems to send a lot of boys into the army," Leo says. "My older brother was in, and I thought it would be a good life so I joined in 1939.

"Then my boys saw so much of me and the army together, that they thought they'd like the life. I never persuaded them, but. . . ." Tom interrupted: "You threw the odd hint." They all laughed.

Both John and Tom joined on their 17th birthday, the earliest legal age for enlistment. John says he will make a career of the army but Tom isn't sure.

Tom had just come down from Gin Hill, reachable only by helicopter, where he had been on guard with five other men for six days.

CAN'T TAKE BATH

"Being up there was a stepping-stone to hell," he said with a wry grin. "The view is lovely but it's very unsanitary up there. The tent is just caked with dirt. You can't take a bath.

"Then when you're not up on the hills, you're back in headquarters for what they call a 'rest period.' The sergeant comes up to you and says: 'You're going for a rest at main camp,' and a big smile comes over your face, and then he finishes the sentence—'but you'll be working in the mess hall.'"

Tom wants to transfer from the Guards to his father's unit. John says he "isn't fussy" and doesn't mind the Guards. But he finds Cyprus service with the United Nations force a bit boring. "I plan on six months here but if it's three, I'm happy. There isn't much to do, no excitement."

Both Tom and John say they miss their mother in Nova Scotia and, mostly, their own families. Each has a wife and two children back home.

Leo loves the army and said he wishes he could have another 20 years of it. When he retires next June he plans to work for the army as a civilian driver.

"I guess I'll be saluting everybody for the first while," he said. "Habits are hard to break."

The three soldiers climbed into a landrover and started their day's holiday. Somebody said: "Have a drink for me, fellows."

"I don't drink," said Leo.
"I don't drink," said John.
"I'm broke," said Tom.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1♠	3♥
Pass	5♥	Pass	6♥

Opening lead—four of spades.

Bad bidding will sometimes produce good results, but that is scarcely a good reason for indulging in bad bids.

Here is a case where bad bidding paid off well. The deal occurred in a team of four match and the North-South pair were well behind at the point when this hand came up.

South had all the values necessary for his three heart bid, but North, in an effort to gain a swing, overbid his hand somewhat by jumping to five hearts. South carried on to six and West led a spade.

East took the ten with the ace and was faced with a problem of what to return. His possible choices were a spade, a diamond or a club. After much thought he returned a spade, which declarer ruffed, and the outcome was that South made the slam.

East could not be sure of the best return to make, but it does seem that his selection of a spade was the worst choice. It was far more likely that South, who had undertaken the slam in the face of a spade bid by East, would have the singleton spade than West.

Viewed differently, there was also a much greater chance on the bidding that South had two aces and West one, than there was that South had started with two spade losers.

If East had viewed the matter in this light, he would still have had to guess whether to play a diamond or a club at trick two. Only a club return would have defeated the contract.

In general, in such situations, the better play is to return the side suit in which declarer is apt to have less cards. In the present case, this would have indicated a club return.

There is a good reason for favoring the return of declarer's shorter suit. If declarer is missing the ace of his longer suit, he may not be able to discard the entire suit on dummy's winners.
