

Campus Security relocates offices

In an effort to better serve students and minimize response time in an emergency, UPEI's Campus Security moved its head offices yesterday, relocating outside of Robertson Library next to one of the university's blue emergency poles. A spokesperson for the department explained that the move was considered after recent events put the effectiveness of Campus Security into question.

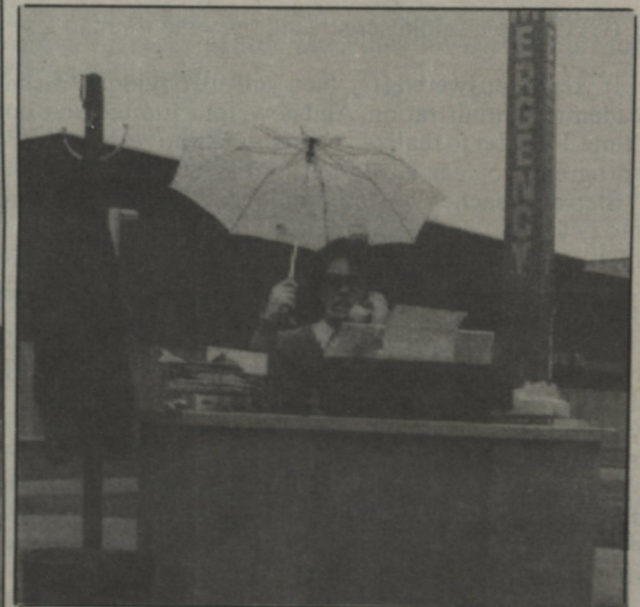

1. Relaxing day at the office; so far

2. Trouble could be a-brewing

3. In his haste, the umbrella is discarded, as he listens to the description of the situation

4. Desperate situation - a guy is talking to some girl in sector four

5. Sips at the leaf filled coffee as the possible "Code Red" situation continues

6. Preparing to type up a memo on the predicament

7. No rape - relaxing day returns. Everything is cool
