ICARUS THE HIGHFLIER.

A Bed-time Story From Greek Mythology.

The idea of the flying machine, about which you hear and read so much nowadays, is by no means new. Even those old Greeks of whom you have grown so fond were possessed of the notion, and one of them, so runs the fable, actually did learn how to fly.
This man, Dædalus by name, was a skilful artisan who taught the people of Athens how to build houses of stone and wood and a host of things besides.
Dædalus had under his instruction his young nephew, Perdix, in whom he soon recognized a rival, so apt a pupil did he prove. One day Perdix found the spine of a fish, which he copied in iron and thus made a saw. He also invented the compass by sharpening two pieces of iron to a point at one end and rivetting the broad ends together.
Soon Dædalus became jealous of his nephew's skill and finally came to hate him. While working together on a scaffold one day Dædalus pushed Perdix off, but Minerva softened his fall and changed him into a partridge.
Dædalus only escaped punishment for his cruel and cowardly act because the Athenians remembered his many good works.

He was driven from Athens, and sailed with his son Icarus, for Crete, where ruled King Minos. Among the labors of Dædalus in Crete was the building of the Labyrinth, a structure containing a thousand rooms and so many curious winding passages that when once within it was almost impossible to find one's way out. This was built as a prison for the Minotaur, a monster who worked much harm in Crete. The hideous creature was entrapped in the Labyrinth and in vain sought his way out.

But Dædalus did many wicked things which angered King Minos, who finally in spite of his skill, imprisoned him and his son in a tower surrounded by many guards to prevent his escape.
Dædalus now bethought himself of a plan which the King could not hinder for though Minos guarded the land and sea, the regions of the air were beyond his control. Dædalus fashioned for himself a pair of wings as nearly like a bird's as possible, fastening small feathers together with thread and the larger ones with wax. When completed he attached them to his shoulders and rose in the air. Then he made a second pair of wings for his son and taught him how to use them. When all was ready, he bade Icarus keep near him, cautioning him not to fly too near the waves lest the dampness clog his wings, neither too high lest the heat of the sun melt the wax. Off they sailed together, and for a time all went well. Icarus, as he saw the sun rise higher in the heavens directed his flight nearer to it, forgetful of his father's warning, perhaps hoping to catch a glimpse of the sun-god in his chariot. Suddenly he felt himself sinking—the sun's heat had melted the wax and loosened the feathers. He waved his arms, but they could not catch the air as had the wings; then he cried to his father, who alas! could give him no help. So he fell into the water and was drowned. Dædalus flew on to Sicily, where he built a temple to Apollo in gratitude for his deliverance.

While You are Growing.

Growing girls and boys do not always appreciate that it is while they are growing that they are forming their figures for after life. Drooping of the shoulders a little more every day, drooping the head as one walks, standing unevenly, so that one hip sinks more than the other—all these defects, are easily corrected now, will be five times as hard in five years, and twenty-five times as hard in ten years. A graceful easy carriage, and an erect, straight figure, are a pleasure to beholder and possessor, and are worth striving for.

An easy way to practice walking well is to start out right. Just before you leave the house walk up to the wall and see that your toes, chest and nose touch it at once; then in that attitude walk away. Keep your head up and your chest out, and your shoulders and back will take care of themselves.

A school teacher used to instruct her pupils to walk always as if trying to look over the top of an imaginary carriage just in front of them. It was good advice, for it kept the head raised.
Don't think these things are of no value. They add to your health and to your attractiveness, two things to which everybody should pay heed.

A Suggestion.

Sir,—I have been asked to write a letter for your paper suggesting the getting up of a Girls Hockey Club. The idea is, I think, a good one. One of the hottest Hockey contests I ever witnessed was played in Halifax last winter, with the rink crowded to the doors. There is nothing unfeminine or ungraceful about the game, and it is one of the best forms of exercise in the world. I know several girls who are anxious to get up a team—one a daughter of my own—and I beg to call Mr. Bartlett's attention to it.

Alexander. We can promise our readers an enjoyable treat in the perusal of this story, the first chapters of which appeared yesterday. Each instalment will be prefaced by a synopsis of the preceding chapters, so that readers will be enabled to INCIPIENT CATARRH CURED.

Mrs. Rosie Stearn, 30 Walton street, Toronto, says:—"I suffered at every change in the weather with cold in the head. At times it was so bad that I was unable to speak, being completely stuffed up.
I was advised to try Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure, and did so, and received immediate relief. I am pleased to testify to its worth gladly. I also received a sample box of Dr. Chase's Ointment for itching of the skin, and it is the best remedy I have ever used. I shall at all times recommend to sufferers Dr. Chase's remedies. His recipes are indeed wonderful."

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED.

Mr. J. Kilfedder, 23 Gerrard street west, Toronto, an old and respected resident of the city, says:—"I have been suffering from Kidney trouble since last fall and found the lightest kind of exercise very painful. I concluded to try Dr.
Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I saw advertised, and the effect was wonderful, the first box removing the pain in my back, and leaving me feeling very much better in every way. I can cheerfully recommend them as the workingman's friend. They are well named K. and L. Pills. The meaning which I took to be Knights of Labour Pills." One pill a dose. 25 cents a box.
