BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

POLLY CHUCK SHOWS JOHNNY AROUND.

Though all the wide, wide world you roam Where'er the heart is, there is home.

Polly Chuck had led Johnny Chuck to her home in the Green Forest. She had dug that home in the fall after Johnny had gone to sleep for the winter.

"This may have been all right for the winter, but you can't live here through the summer," mumbled Johnny.

"Whoever heard of a Woodchuck living in the Green Forest?" retorted Johnny Chuck.

SIZING UP THE OPPONENTS

The proper play of such a hand as the following depends on the most precise appraisal of an opponent's bidding style.

Crossword puzzle grid with clues and answers.

North dealer. Both sides vulnerable. This deal occurred in a high-stake rubber game, and the bidding proceeded:

Bridge bidding table with North, East, South, West and Pass/Not Pass indicators.

West was not to be dissuaded by South's cue bid for opening East's suit, and led the spade ten. South won with the ace and led a low heart to the jack.

After winning with dummy's spade king, declarer drew West's trump, then led the club through East. The latter did not cover, but played the king on the following lead of the club jack.

"Whoever heard of a Woodchuck living in the Green Forest?" retorted Johnny Chuck.

Meadows," retorted Polly Chuck. "But—" began Johnny. "But nothing," snapped Polly. She was losing patience.

"What I mean is we Chucks are people of the open space like the Green Meadows, or perhaps places where there are bushes like the Old Pasture and along the old stone wall, but not in among the tall trees that make the Green Forest.

"Why do you think we are called Woodchucks if none of the family ever live in the woods?" demanded Polly Chuck.

There was a funny look on the face of Johnny Chuck. Yes, sir, there was so. "I've never thought of that," said he slowly.

Who should come along just then but Sammy Jay's cousin, Whiskey Jack. Anyway that is what some folks call him instead of by his real name, which is Canada Jay.

"Of course Woodchucks used to live in the woods. They still do. I've often seen them in the Deep Woods. A couple have been neighbors of mine for a long time, and I live away up in the Deep Woods.

"Because when I have shown you around, you are going to say that this is the very best home we ever have had. We've never had anything like it," declared Polly. "Come on."

She led the way down inside the house under the great rock. Johnny Chuck hesitated a moment, then followed. Sammy Jay's cousin chuckled and flew away.
