CONTRACT BRIDGE

By E. JAY BECKER

FAMOUS HAND

Viewed optimistically, he could discount the heart loser, count only one club loser if either defender had been dealt K-x of clubs, and one diamond loser provided he decided correctly whether to take a single or double diamond finesse.

The problem was difficult to solve because he had only one entry card to dummy. If he played a club to the ace, what would he do next? Should he take a diamond finesse or lead a club towards the queen?

In the actual hand, neither play would have been effective. He could save a trick in whichever suit he chose to lead, but would later lose two tricks in the other suit and go down one.

After considering the matter at length, Lowery came up with an ingenious play that permitted him to make the contract. He had already decided that on the bidding it was likely that West had the king of diamonds.

After winning the ace of spades, Lowery led the queen of diamonds! West won and returned a spade which South ruffed.

Now a club was played to the ace, and the ten of diamonds was returned. East ducked, but it would not have mattered if he had covered. Still in dummy, Lowery was able to lead a club towards the queen and make the contract.

He had contrived, by virtue of his brilliant play at trick two, to lead twice from dummy, even though dummy had only one entry.

us (sopranos and altos) "Welcome to Lovely Spring"; "The Gipsy", with Swabey Jelly, soloist. "Lonesome Town", with George Saunders, soloist; "My Happiness", chorus. Sheila Carruthers played rhythm bells accompanied with this group. Ah! Sweet Mystery of Life, vocal solo by Olive Harris.
