A GEM OF ART.

BY AMY RANDOLPH.

"Seventy-five dollars for a picture frame!" cried Mr. Mapleton. "My dear Augusta, isn't that just a little extravagant?"

It was almost the first remonstrance Mr. Mapleton had ventured to utter to his wife, for the glow of their honeymoon had not yet faded from the matrimonial horizon. But he was only a young merchant, whose business had not yet arrived at an overwhelming pitch of success, and he was beginning to think that Mrs.
Mapleton's ideas were a little too high-toned for such a limited income as theirs was.

Mrs. Mapleton turned toward him with a sad moonlight sort of a smile.
"My dear Gerard," she said, "pray excuse me but you are quite ignorant of the subject. That picture which dear Louise Larrance gave me for a wedding present is a real Meissonier. One of the great artist's earliest attempts, it is true, and, perhaps lacking in the exquisite finish which characterizes his later productions, but a still a Meisson-ier. And no common or tawdry piece of gild-ing can befit such a gem of art as this. It will light up our drawing room as a jewel lights up some dusky ocean cave."

So the seventy-five dollar frame was ordered, and the Meissonier was sent home incased in its splendor.

Grandma Mapleton shook her old white head when it was carried in.
"It may be a gem of art," said she. "I ain't no judge of such things. But I'm sartin that your business won't support Augusta if she keeps on at this rate. Your grandfather's picture of 'Washington Crossing the Delaware,' was framed in a cherry wood moulding that didn't cost fifty cents. And even the portrait of Sarah Jane, playing the harp, that was done by the travelling journeyman who painted the barn, was put in a plain gilt frame that only cost three dollars and a half."

"Oh, grandma!" cried Mrs. Mapleton, despairingly, "can't you understand that the world has altered since you were a girl?"

"Oh, I know that well enough," said Grandma Mapleton, meditatively, polishing her spectacle glasses with the corner of her apron. "But ain't it altogether certain that it has altered for the better?"

Grandma Mapleton, bless her kindly old head, had many doubts and fears as to the way in which her grandson and his wife were beginning their career.

"Brussels carpets all over the house," said she. "Ingrain was good enough in my day, with Venetian stripe on the stairs and oilcloth on the hall, so that you could scrub 'em up once a week, and make sartin' you were clean.
And Augusta has got ebony cabinets to hold china and stuff, where I used to be satisfied with a wooden corner cupboard. And there are carpets strung up before every door, and furniture in every hole and corner, and I fairly ache to go and fold 'em all up and put 'em away. But this picture business outdoes everything. What! new current-colored plush coverings for the furniture! Why Augusta, there ain't no earthly need for that."

"They must match the band of current-colored plush in the picture frame, don't you see?" impatiently retorted Mrs. Gerard Mapleton. "Everything must be toned to the key of the Meissonier!"

Grandma said nothing. She only shook her head again, this time more vehemently than ever.

"I wish the Meissonier never had come into the house," said she to herself. "It has fairly turned Gerard's wife's head. And I don't see as it's any different from any other picture."

Mrs. Gerard Mapleton, however, thought differently. She "toned" the little drawing room satisfactorily to the key of the Meisson-ier, and then issued cards for "Wednesday evenings."

"Not regular parties, you know," she explained to her friends. "Just evenings. And —and music—and literary conversation, and all that sort of thing."

Mr. Mapleton looked doubtful.
"My dear," said he, "all that sort of thing, as you call it, costs money. And I'm not sure that we can afford it."

"Oh, Gerard, don't be ridiculous!" said Augusta with a pouting show of her show teeth. "Afford! You are always thinking of money. A few slices of cake and a glass of wine or so—what can it signify? And as for my dress, I should have required a new black silk this winter in any event."

"Mr. Mapleton could say no more; but by and by, when the bills came in, thick as "autumn leaves that strew the brooks of Val-lambrusa," his face assumed a worn and haggard expression—a troubled look—that went to grandma's heart.

"Gerard," she said, softly, "what is it?
Don't be afraid of coming to granny, my boy.
It was me that bound up the first cut finger you ever had."

"Hearts' wounds are not so easily healed, grandma," said the young man, half laughing, half sighing. "But I may as well be frank with you. That Meissonier is ruining me. I wish to goodness Miss Larrance had kept it to herself."

Mrs. Mapleton had invited some artistic friends that evening to look at her picture.
With these came a famous English connoisseur, whose manners were as brusque as his judgment was excellent.

"That's a Meissonier!" he cried, abruptly.
"Why it is the merest dabb that ever was framed!"

"A copy!" cried Mrs. Mapleton, growing pale.

"A copy," said the connoisseur, "and a very poor one! It isn't worth the room it takes up on 'your wall, my dear madam."

at this having ruined you, when she came in like a guardian, as she is. And, oh, she talked so beautifully to me—just exactly as if I were a little child who had done wrong out of simple inadvertence. And she wants us to go out to her old farm house on the Housatonic River and live there. It's all furnished, she says, and—and—with a little hysterical laugh—"there are no Meissoniers there!"

So the young couple went out to the farm house, where the sunbeams were beginning to flaunt their crimson velvet torches, and the stone walls were garlanded in scarlet festoons of woodbine, and there they began the world anew.

"Dear grandma," said Mrs. Mapleton, one day, "how wrong an estimate I formed of your character when first you came to us!"

"You thought me a meddling old woman eh?" said grandma, her keen blue eyes sparkling shrewdly through her glasses.

"But I don't think so now," said Augusta.
"I am so much happier here, with my bees and my chickens, and all the beautiful things which surround me. And Gerard has not got that troubled look in his face all the time; And he is growing so sunburnt and healthy."

"You are both of you contented, eh?" said grandma, knitting diligently away.

"Oh, yes; quite," said Augusta, giving the old lady's withered hand a squeeze.

"Well, then," said old Mrs. Mapleton, "I will tell you a little secret; there is ten thousand dollars in the Woodhaven Bank which I have been saving up for Gerard to start business again."

"Keep it there," said Gerard promptly, "I am satisfied with being a farmer."

"And what does Augusta say?" asked the old lady.

"Augusta says the same," declared the young wife. "She is quite satisfied."

Grandma Mapleton smiled. The lesson of adversity had not been in vain.

Mrs. Augusta added:
"The picture of woods and fields that I can see at sunset from this back yard is lovelier than all the Meissoniers in the world."

"I think so, too," said Gerard; but in his secret heart he believed that the happy light in Augusta's eyes was a still fairer and sweeter picture.

An Army of 13,000,000 Men.

CHINA'S SOLDIERS TO BE RE-ARMED AND DRILLED, TO ENABLE HER TO COPE WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mail advices by steamer from Australia, at San Francisco, state that leading Chinese merchants of Ouedin, one of the chief cities of New Zealand, have received a copy of an imperial proclamation and edict from Peking, in which the action of the colonies in trying to prohibit Chinese immigration is characterized.

The proclamation says the imperial army numbers 13,000,000 men, but, they are not so well armed or drilled as the troops of western nations, while the navy, though larger than a few years ago, is not sufficiently large to warrant the empire taking aggressive action. The government, however, intends building more ships, and also improving the army. The work of rearming and retraining the army, and of rebuilding warships sufficiently powerful to enable the Chinese empire to cope with the soldiery and navy of Great Britain will occupy a period of three years. By the edict the government of China commands all Chinese subjects in Australian colonies to wind up their business affairs within the next three years and return to China by the expiration of that period.

Gems of Thought.

Art may err, but nature cannot miss.
A kind No is often more agreeable than a rough Yes.

A man may have much of the world, and yet not be much of a man.
Let a man restore order within himself and chaos without ceases.

All who joy would win must share it.
Happiness was borne a twin.
The pleasure of doing good is the only pleasure that never wears out.

The company in which you will improve most will be least expensive to you.
Sin is a hard task-master and pays dreadful wages. "The wages of sin is death." He is the richest man who knows how to use the keys which Life put into his hands.

Those who tell you of others' faults will make themselves as free to others of your own.
We remain young so long as we can learn, can adopt new habits, and can bear contradiction.
It is much easier to think right without doing right, than to do right without thinking right.
If there is any person to whom you feel a dislike, that is the person of whom you should never speak.

Be courageous and noble-minded; our own heart, and not other men's opinions of us, forms our true honor.
Mrs. Kellogg, the wife of a devoted missionary to India, while sensible that she was dying, exclaimed exultingly: "No sickness, no death there! Happy is Jesus, saved entirely in Him!" One of the best rules in conversation is never to say a thing which any of the company can reasonably wish we had rather left unsaid; nor can there well be anything more contrary to the ends for which people meet together, than to part unsatisfied with each other or themselves.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, softens the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind. (April 1 '88)
