Sino-Russian Trade Drops Hard Blow At Mongolia

The Mongolian People's Republic is a land of herders men between Siberia on the north and China on the south. It is a land of Western reporters. The Associated Press reports that it filed the following dispatches in the following days, traveling via the Soviet Union.

By HENRY S. BRADSHAW. ULAN BATOR, Mongolia (AP)—The main rail line from Russia to Red China, which carries much Mongolian export, carries little traffic these days. From the window of the main hotel in Ulan Bator, capital of the Mongolian People's Republic, one can see and hear only two or three trains a day. In a few days recently 150 Russian motor trucks passed through on their way to the east, some to China, some to the west.

Until about six months ago, some 20 freight trains a day came through, according to one observer living here. Chinese payments to Mongolia for transit traffic were a major part of the economy of the Communist-run Mongolia. Now Mongolia is suffering economically as a result of the dispute between China and Russia. With Mongolia supporting Russia in the dispute, China has been tough rather than helpful toward this former Chinese possession. In addition to the decline in rail traffic, there is uncertainty whether China will continue to help with economic development here.

OFFICIALS WORRIED. The official comment is not available on the situation reported by the "informed sources" in Ulan Bator. But Mongolian officials are reliably reported to be worried. The transit payments paid for almost all Mongolia's imports from China. With only a few light industries operating here, Mongolia is heavily dependent on imports. In 1963, the last year for which figures are available, China supplied 23 per cent of Mongolia's imports. Talks for a 1964 trade agreement were broken off in Peking in November when China demanded a greatly enlarged part of the transit payments paid for almost all Mongolia's imports from China.

wanting to move into Siberia on Mongolia could be the pressure of population in China. Inner Mongolia, the part of China bordering this country on the south and east, has been heavily colonized by Chinese. Outer Mongolia has an average of fewer than two persons a square mile. Until its fall in 1911, the Manchou dynasty of China claimed full legal authority over Outer Mongolia and exercised a loose control. China was trying to reassert its control when the foundations of the modern, Communist Mongolia state were laid by Mongolian partisans and Russian troops in 1921. Now the Mongolian government, the single political party, which operates in many other things are organized along Russian lines, with Russian aid. It seemed logical, then, that Tseeden-baldan, who is Russian-born to take Khrushchev's place. Now, the best available source in Mongolia is worried about how much the Chinese-Russian conflict will cost the Mongolian economy.

between the United States and Russia have created a friendly atmosphere here toward the U.S., Mongolia has had to work very hard to form the basis of friendship with China. Until last December Mongolia's 2,700-mile border with China was in dispute. Then Peking summoned the Mongolian premier and Communist party boss, Yumzhag Dorj, to sign a border treaty. The number was down to 6,000 square kilometers in dispute, Mongolia got 12,000. The border has yet to be marked. Chinese statistics indicate a desire to reclaim some Siberian regions east of Mongolia that Russian expansion incorporated centuries ago. A basic Chinese reason for

DECLARER TAKES THE HEART WITH THE ACE OF SPADES

South new plays a diamond, this time discarding a club. Declarer does not see West's cards, but he knows now that West started with precisely two spades and one diamond. This indicates, in turn, that West originally had ten cards in hearts and clubs. He has discarded one of each so far.
