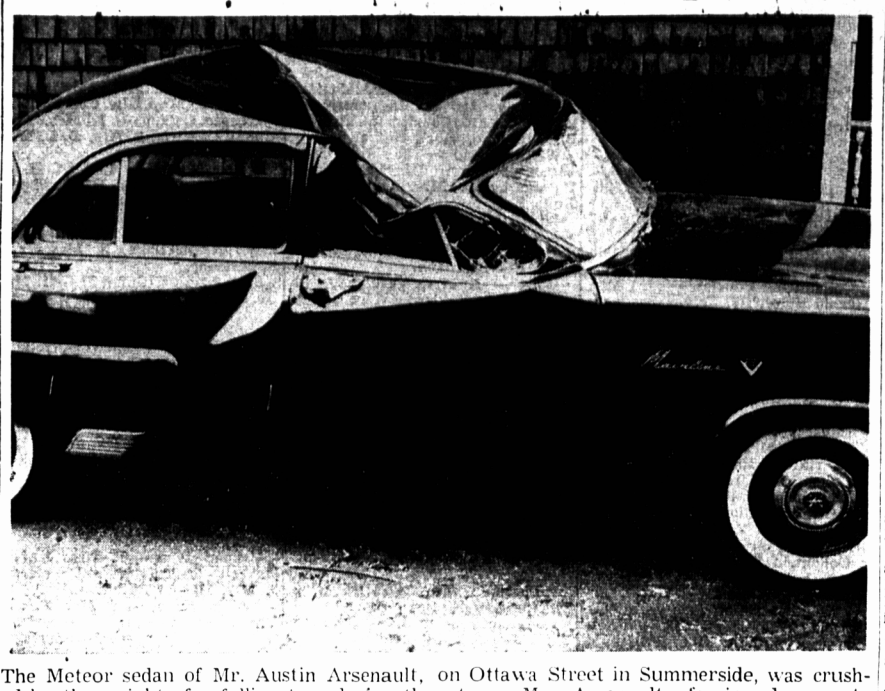
Moved Car But To Wrong Place



The Meteor sedan of Mr. Austin Arsenault, on Ottawa Street in Summerside, was crushed by the weight of a falling tree during the storm. Mr. Arsenault, fearing damage to his car, had gone out into the night to move the car to another spot in the yard which he considered to be safer, however the wind willed otherwise and sent the tree crashing across the roof of the car. There was no insurance to cover this damage.

Islander Training In R C A F Jet Aircraft

Flight Cadet Don Profitt, left, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Profitt, of Freetown, P.E.I., receives last minute instruction from his instructor, Flying Officer "Don" Cameron, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Cameron, 162 James Street, Moncton, N.B., prior to carrying out a cross-country exercise from RCAF Station Gimli, Manitoba. F/C Profitt, a student at Mount Allison University, is one of the first of a group of University students to undergo training on Jet Aircraft in the RCAF under the RCAF's Regular Officers Training Plan.

Five Countries to Fly Supersonic Jet

THE FIGHTER PUNCH of five Western countries is to be strengthened by the British Hawker Hunter, supersonic, swept-back wing, single-seat jet interceptor. Rated one of the world's fastest fighters, it is already in super-priority production for Britain's Royal Air Force and deliveries for Holland, Belgium, Denmark and Sweden are to be spread over the next two years.

Use For Discarded Cans

South Koreans, with few tools and little raw material to work with, surprise occidental visitors with their ingenuity in adapting supposedly useless things to help them in their grim struggle for survival. One of the most fascinating of inventions mothered by necessity in Korea is the machinery developed for processing tin cans into corrugated sheeting for houses, barns and awnings. Millions of ordinary tin cans used and discarded by the various armies in the country are flattened by hand, pounded together, pressed into flat strips, then corrugated in this machine. The labels are still on the flattened tins

Island Odds and Ends

Does the horse you bet on feel bad when he finishes in the ruck, and your mutuel ticket no longer has any speculative value? Larry Trainor, retired Inspector of Weights and Measures in Charlottetown, claims that some horses feel very badly when they let their backers down, and tells a story to prove it. Like hundreds of other Islanders, Larry takes a flyer on the ponies now and again, and it was at the Charlottetown track that he had his strange experience a few weeks ago. But let Larry tell the story in his own words.

"Six of the nine heats were over when it happened," he explained, "and I had lost money on every one of them. Then came what I judged my chance, to recoup my losses, end the jinx, and wind up the day with a profit. The horse I picked was not the favorite, but he had what it takes to win when he behaved well. He went well, and was in third position at the head of the stretch. Then he pulled out and paced to the front, and came sailing down the stretch leading by a couple of lengths. He looked a sure winner, and standing at the rail about twenty yards from the wire I fingered the mutuel tickets in my pocket, and mentally figured the payoff. And then it happened. As he neared my railside position finishing strongly and in full command of the race, he suddenly staggered, swayed drunkenly across the track in my direction, and sagged to the ground almost within arms reach. I stared at him unbelievingly and as his head hit the track rather tiredly, he rolled his eyes sorrowfully right at me almost, as if to say 'I couldn't help it.'"

That is Larry's story and it remains to say, that the sorrowful horse had swallowed his tongue, and temporarily stopped breathing correctly.

Charlottetown's new high school, the Queen Charlotte takes nothing away in attractiveness from fast-growing beautiful and residential Brighton, in which it is located. With the nearby Provincial Sanatorium and its appropriate nurses home, the new institution forms a pleasing group of three buildings.

Some of the older people in the City think it's too far out on the rim of our population but youth is youth, and an extra half mile or so is no tax on young legs. Marilyn Bell, the Ontario sixteen year old who swam 32 miles across Lake Ontario, would certainly not be dismayed by such a daily walk.

There are between thirty and forty leased fishing ponds in this Province from which the public is excluded. The leasing of ponds has not been widespread until the years following the war, although some fishing properties have been under lease for twenty years or more. Many sportsmen deplore the trend towards cutting the general public off from so many trout streams, and think a scheme could be devised whereby the Government could take over the lot, and operate them under supervision. Under this plan the number of boats per pond would be limited by the size of the pond and its trout population. There would of course be opposition from some lessees, but others would welcome the chance of a wider choice of fishing spots. Perhaps the most strenous objections would come from the actual owners of property, many of whom have leased fishing rights to small groups to end unrestrained traffic over their lands at all times of the day and night. These objections might be overcome with the promise of proper supervision. Revenue from boats and fishing privileges could be expected to cover supervisory expenses. Much present day leasing is arranged in self defence, in fear that very soon there will be no free fishing spots left in the whole Province.

A rare bird indeed came to the hands of Mr. A. F. Calder, Charlottetown taxidermist, a few days ago. It was an Acadian Saw-wet, smallest of the eight known species of owls. A resident of Kensington forwarded the bird to Mr. Calder for mounting. It had not been shot and it is believed may have been a pet.

It is about the size of a small Robin, has a red breast like a Robin, with the rest of the body brown in color. They are very rare in this Province, states Mr. Calder, and this specimen is the first he has seen in twenty years.
