Unholy Bond

By Cameron Dockery

"I've been so used to having school children troop in here all morning that I thought you were another. 'I almost said, 'Say Ah!'"

"It'll make you feel more professional. I'll go through the motions."

"Haven't you been doing any operations, Cliff?"

"Only a few since you left. They handed me a large slice of your husband's practice. Janet you don't know how I hate him for leaving here, aside from the fact that he took you with him."

"Your chance will come, Cliff."

"It had better come soon. I found a gray hair today—it was a terrific shock. I can tell you." He laughed at himself, then instantly sobered. "How are things with you, Janet?"

"About the same. There was an evening when I thought something might happen to change them, but Naomi appeared with a carload of internes, and ended it."

"She's an attractive infant," remarked Cliff, "but I'm afraid she rather fancies herself as a femme fatale."

"In a way, Naomi is my reason for coming in to see you."

"Oh, oh?" His eyes twinkled.

"Do you need a reason, Janet?"

"I'm afraid so, now. Anyway, she is the reason this time."

"Do I smell a plot?"

"Not much of a one. She's invited herself to spend Sunday with us. Dr. and Mrs. Farquhar are going to be out of town. I wondered if you wouldn't drive her out and have Sunday dinner with us?"

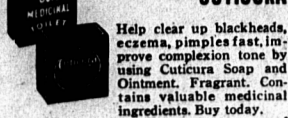

"What am I supposed to be doing—keeping Naomi away from Richard?"

CHAPTER TEN
Part One
"No, keep her away from me.

I'm sure she doesn't care for me and I want to avoid a scene with her. Richard is very fond of Dr. and Mrs. Farquhar and I'm sure they've no idea of the way Naomi is acting. In the morning when she is teaching the children I'm in the laboratory, but I'm afraid a whole day of Naomi and Richard fawning over each other is more than I can take."

"To her surprise, Cliff frowned. "I think you're being unfair. From what I can gather, the infatuation is all on Naomi's side. But if it will mean being with you, Janet, I'll come, of course."

When she returned, it was to find Mr. Prentice's tonneaued town car at the entrance to Oakhart. As she walked by it she was startled to see a thin, white-faced, little boy peering from the back seat. He was almost lost in the heavy folds of a steamer rug.

"Well," she said, "who are you?"

"Jonathan Prentice," he said seriously.

"You are? Is Mr. Prentice your grandfather?"

Before the child could reply, the liveried chauffeur turned stiffly in the front seat. "Mr. Prentice is Jonathan's father, ma'am. He smothered at some humorous secret of which Janet was evidently supposed to be aware."

She ignored him and stared at the child. He was very delicate in appearance, his skin so thin and clear that the veins at his temples were a deep blue. He couldn't be more than nine, yet Mr. Prentice was easily sixty. It was all very strange, somehow Janet had never thought of Mr. Prentice as having a family of any sort.

As she turned, Richard and the lawyer appeared at the front door. Mr. Prentice hurried over to the car and stared anxiously at the child. "Not too cold, are you, son?"

The youngster shot him a wan smile and shook his head.

"I didn't even know you had a child, Mr. Prentice," Janet said.

"Yes," he said, "Jonathan is my entire family—he's all I have."

Snow began to fall before noon on Sunday. Not the gentle, slow fall of a temporary, quick-melting coating, but the thick, swirling, hard-driven kind that swiftly formed a new layer over the two-foot-deep crust surrounding Oakhart. Janet wondered, even hoped, that it might keep Naomi in the city—but promptly at twelve she and Cliff arrived. Naomi was excited.

"Isn't this weather thrilling! If Cliff hadn't chains we'd never have made it—we passed dozens of stalled cars."

It was plain that Cliff didn't share her enthusiasm, he even seemed worried, an unusual emotion for him.

"If it keeps up we may have to ski back," he said half-jokingly.

"We can always put you up," Janet said politely, though, the thought of Naomi and Cliff being snowbound at Oakhart appalled her.

Naomi smiled a little secretly, but didn't reply; instead she spun around in a circle until her dark hair stood out like a shimmering fan.

"Cliff, come and see my school-room—it's about the prettiest one a teacher could have."

Cliff followed her obediently into the playroom.

"How is your work going at the Hospital?" Richard said.

"Much against my will, I'm apparently slated to become a pediatrician," he grinned ruefully. "My greatest accomplishment is telling mothers different ways of disguising castor-oil."

He entered the P. E. Island Hospital on October 19th for treatment, where he remained three months and returned home much improved.

His health again failing him he was advised by the family doctor, Lester Brehaut, to re-enter the hospital, where he passed away nine days later.

Sencebaugh family.

He was tenderly laid to rest in the Murray Harbor Cemetery.

I cannot say, and I will not say that he is dead, he is just away. With a cheery smile, and a wave of the hand,
He has wandered into an unknown land.
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there;
And you, O you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return,
Think of him faring on as dear
In the love of There as the love of Here;
Think of him still as the same I say:
He is not dead—he is just away!
