Dr. Shaw outlined two methods by which the association may be formed, and it was later moved by Cecil Beck and seconded by George Nicholson that a nominating committee be set up to bring in a slate of officers at a later meeting. The announcements were read by Mr. Anderson, and more songs followed the taking of the offering by two little boys. Mrs. Arol Burch then took the pulpit and read a chapter from Fulton Oursler's "The Greatest Story Ever Told". In this chapter the author tells of Jesus' controversy with the young and clever lawyer who tried to confuse the Master and get him in conflict with the strict Jewish religious law. When he replied to the query of the lawyer as to "who is my neighbor", by the parable of the Good Samaritan, a story that down through the ages, has convicted many—people and preacher, prophet and priest—of uncharitableness in their attitude towards the sick and helpless, the confused reaction of the counselor of long ago was understandable. Mrs. Burch's clear articulation and realistic interpretation, were pleasing.

A new pastor is coming in the near future who will be heartily welcomed, but in the meantime the young people by this type of service which would not ordinarily be necessary, are developing spiritually, and mentally, and are given the opportunity of demonstrating without opposition, the inspiring qualities of appealing music unconstrained by the confining demands of a denominational sermon. The oldsters of St. Peter's are

However, he continued, not only must the home and school cooperate, but also every agency in the community, church, Scouts, Guides, Rink, Theater, and any other which affects the life of the child, since the child is the greatest asset of any community. Although in P. E. I. the Home and School Association has grown slowly, it is steadily increasing in numbers, and has done and will do a great deal in bringing the parents and teachers together to solve the many problems regarding the students and schools. This Dr. Shaw pointed out, was the primary purpose of the association, not to provide the working materials in the school room, nor only to find fault with the teachers, or the teachers to find fault with the parents, but was a body set up to assist at solving the problems proud of the young people, who are taking over so completely, and feel sure that the incoming incumbent will have a nucleus around which, if he is at all cooperative he can build a solid church organization, so necessary in age devoid of spirituality and humility where most expected.

WILLIAMS, NIGH, MORGAN CO-STAR IN "DERBY" STORY Bill Williams, Jane Nigh and Ralph Morgan are starred in "Blue Grass of Kentucky" the thrilling Monogram drama opening today at the Capitol Theatre. Filmed in Cinecolor, the horse race story is told against the backdrop of the traditionally colorful Kentucky Derby, culminating in the actual running of the famous classic. Miss Nigh is cast as the convincing daughter of a fabulously wealthy stable owner whose horses are often matched against those of the Major Randolph McIvor stables. She is obvious regarding her love for the major's son Lin, and stages a rather neat trick which enables the McIvor stables to produce a Kentucky Derby winner, even though one of her father's consistent winners is entered in the same race. The entire film reflects the colorful life of horse breeders in the South's blue-grass country. In addition to the scenes photographed at Churchill Downs, home of the Kentucky Derby, others were filmed at Northridge Farms, near Hollywood and once known as Marwyck when owned by Barbara Stanwyck and Zepke Marx.
