THE LIBERALS COURSE ON PREFERENTIAL TRADE

And Other Important Matters Effectively Dealt With

Now, it ought to be an easy task, in the light of these facts, for you to decide which of the two great parties of Canada is entitled to your support. But there is another matter which may enable every honest man to arrive at such a decision. Let him ask the question, "Which party has kept its promises, and which has not done so?" (Cheers). There is no intelligent man who has confidence in those persons who habitually violate their promises. When we find people violating their promises the less credence we give them the better. Well, you know how profuse the Liberals have been with promises of what they would do, if entrusted with power in this country. I challenged them in Parliament, and I here challenge them again, to-night, to show where they have redeemed a single promise made by them previous to the last general election. do this, knowing that every word I say will be published broadcast over Canada, and consequently every man of them will have an opportunity to take up the challenge. Ever since they took their seats on the Treasury benches, they have thrown all their promises to the winds. A man may sometimes make an honest promise, and be defeated in his intention, through no fault of his. I find no fault with such a promise, or with its defeat. But, Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a promise before the last General Election, stating what he would do if elected, which he never attempted to fulfil. I challenged him in Parliament to disprove this statement of mine; but he did not attempt to do so. I will allude to this matter later on; and I repeat that the Government are a party destitute of policy or principle. No man present can show me that Sir Wilfrid Laurier ever propounded any public policy that he has not trampled under his feet. The Government have neither policy nor principle to guide them; and therefore are unfit to guide the country. It is on this ground that I now ask the electors present here tonight to support the great Liberal-Conservative Party who have carried out the promises made by them to the people of this country and have made Canada what it is today. Our promises have been redeemed to the very best of our ability. It is under these circumstances I appeal to the electorate of this Province. It is for you to retain in power the present Government, or to say to them, "Get you gone and give place to better men; you have been weighed in the balances and are found wanting." Or say to them: "We ask you to give place to men who have always carried out their promises and their pledges in such a way as to benefit our common country." (Cheers.) I indict the present government of Canada, in the face of the great electorate of the country, of having been guilty of incapacity, maladministration and corruption. These are the grounds upon which I ask you to dismiss them from power and to place the Government in the hands of men who will honestly carry out the pledges which they have made to the people.

(Sir Charles was here interrupted by a person in the audience who asked the question, "What about two-cent postage?") Well now, continued Sir Charles, I think this person must be a two-cent elector. (Roars of laughter.) Well, Sir Wilfrid had promised a three-cent postage, not a two-cent one. When he (Sir Wilfrid) afterwards made a promise to give a two-cent postage, the British Government told him, (in effect) that he had made a fool of himself. (Laughter.) He had no power to send a two-cent letter around the world without their consent and approval. When he was told that by doing so he would impose a fine in certain countries of eight cents upon every person who received such a letter he instructed his postmasters to steal the necessary stamps and place them on the letters to carry them to their destination. When I charged him with doing this in my place in parliament he admitted the corn. Hon Mr Mulock, Postmaster General, attended a postal conference in London, and when one of the delegates present proposed a penny postage he (Mr Mulock) jumped to his feet and got in his resolution in favor of a two-cent postage ahead of the man who made the proposition. That forced the government into the two-cent postage plan. No doubt my friend who interrupted me wished to divert my attention from the charges I have been making against the government to this small business.

One of the works we promised to construct was the Crow's Nest Pass railway. It was intended for the purpose of connecting British Columbia with the great prairies of the Northwest. We stated frankly that we would construct that great work for $1,600,000, but were denounced by some newspapers for making a proposal of that kind. The present Government, however, promptly adopted our plan at a cost of two million dollars more than we proposed to expend. Does that show capacity or incapacity on the part of the Government? [The Drummond County] Railway Deal was another corrupt act. The purchase of that railway was unnecessary, as both parties were pledged to build a bridge over the St. Lawrence at the city of Quebec. The Intercolonial would then have an entrance to that city. An arrangement could have been made with the Canadian Pacific Railway to handle the traffic from that city to Montreal, without costing the country a single dollar. But what did Mr. Blair do? He proposed to buy an old rattleback railway at a cost of $8,000,000 which would hang around the necks of the people for all time. But thank God we have a Senate which promptly rejected the proposal, and thus protected the best interests of the country. Otherwise there would have been no way to protect the country against the errors of the House of Commons. During the following session, Mr. Blair introduced another measure for the purchase of that railway at a cost of a million dollars less. It was a most discreditable transaction. But that was a small matter compared with what follows. Down came the Minister of Railways with a measure to grant away four millions of acres of the public lands for building only 150 miles of railway in the Yukon regions.

ANSWER TO "MR. PICK."

DEAR SIR,—The writer of Donaldston notes must surely find time very heavy on his hands or he would not write such silly nonsense as has appeared in the columns of your paper from his pen. Now I wish to tell "Mr. Pick" that although in his mind's eye he may see a brilliant future as a writer awaiting him, still he has made a poor beginning in trying to breed discord among the peaceable and hard-working people of Donaldston. So that if "Mr. Pick" alias "Prince Tuan" alias "Paris Green" values his otherwise good name, he had better write something more sensible in the future than he has done in the past.

A RESIDENT.
