'Sheet Pedagogy' Is Brain Child Of Young Aunt

NEW YORK (AP)—Janet Wagner is using bed linens to teach pre-school children how to read, count, and tell time.

Call it sheet pedagogy. Janet, a young blonde actress, jazz pianist, poet, and baby sitter to a lively nephew, conceived the idea of printing instructive pictures and text on pillow and sheet borders.

When toddlers are ready to graduate from these to more difficult lessons, Janet plans to be ready, too with didactic bed coverings dealing with history, English, good manners, and the mechanics of planes and automobiles. Maybe she will send diplomas to those who complete their entire linen course.

HAS VARIED CAREER

Before taking up linen literature, Janet, a native of Morristown, Tenn., was a television actress, played jazz piano in a Carnegie Hall concert, was secretary to poet Robert Graves in Majorca, illustrated children's books, and was an interior decorator.

"This opens a whole new field," says the petite 29-year-old, who already has patented, and profited from a heat sealing process for polyethylene packaging and a lady's bouder rack.

"Perhaps we'll have fluorescent sheets for kids afraid of the dark," suggests Janet, "or for kids who read under the covers when the lights are out."

The Unbeatable Bluenose

During the 20's and 30's the big clipper from Lunenburg N.S. was acclaimed queen of the North Atlantic fishing fleet. Bluenose went on to become the most famous sailing ship of this century and so beloved by Canadians that her image is still kept bright on all Canadian dimes.

In the October issue of Reader's Digest Canadian writer David MacDonald tells the fascinating story of the ship that became the darling of Canada. Read how the Bluenose beat the best the British and Americans could offer—but ended her glorious career as lowly cargo carrier in the Caribbean. Her passing, in 1946, was reported as a "national sorrow" and "the ignominy of her death." October Reader's Digest is now on sale.
