

Election Campaign in Quebec Appears Low-Pressure Contest

By RUSS PEDEN
MONTREAL (CP) — As the first week campaigning drew to a close, Quebec's June 5 provincial general election campaign is shaping up as a low-pressure contest based more on party images than party platforms—at least as far as the traditional major parties are concerned.

Premier Jean Lesage, who won re-election handily in 1962 on the slogan "maîtres chez nous" (masters in our own house), seems to be relying now on a continuation of existing policies and a defence of the last six years of Liberal administration.

At his campaign-opening rally in Sherbrooke, he asked for a mandate to press the claims of Quebec in Ottawa, to make the province "stronger than ever."

Both the Liberals and the Union Nationale would go after the federal government for more revenue from personal income tax, corporation tax, and succession duties. Both would seek to take over social security funds such as family allowances and old age pensions.

Both want Quebec to stay in Confederation, but would seek a new or revised Confederation agreement increasing Quebec's powers.

Between them, the Liberals and the Union Nationale accounted for all but one of the sitting members of the last legislature. The party standings at dissolution were: Liberals 64, Union Nationale 28, Independent 1, Vacant 2.

HAS MANY NEWCOMERS

Daniel Johnson, whose Union Nationale party formed the opposition in the last legislature, has been stressing that the Union Nationale has changed in the last six years and that 88 of its full slate of 108 candidates are newcomers.

URGE SPLIT

But a new element has been injected into the current campaign with the entry into politics of an aggressive separatist group, Le Rassemblement pour l'Indépendance Nationale, whose members want Quebec to split with the rest of Canada.

IS WORTH SACRIFICE

He tells his rallies he is not looking at the question of separatism through rose-colored glasses. An independent Quebec would be beset with difficulties but the goal was worth the sacrifice.

Auto Industry Shows Concern Over Drop In Early May Sales

DETROIT (AP) — U.S. auto sales fell last week to one of its lowest points of the year following a drop in early May auto sales.

Preliminary figures showed 188,732 cars came off U.S. assembly lines, down 6,000 from last week and 17,000 below the same week last year.

The industry made no secret of its concern over sales reports which showed that April and the May 1-10 period ran behind 1965.

Henry Ford II, chairman of Ford Motor Co., predicted 1966 auto production would fall short of last year's total.

Ford told a business meeting at Hot Springs, Va., Friday that the auto safety issue played a major role in auto sales and production drops.

Ford's new estimate of a 9,000,000-car year was 300,000 below his original estimate made last December.

Michigan's 1966-67 fiscal year begins July 1.

May 1-10 reports showed sales 15 per cent off the 1965 pace for the same period. Earlier reports showed April sales ran about five per cent behind a year ago.

General Motors said its 23 assembly plants would work regular five-day weeks next week, but there were indications some plants would be put on short time at the end of May.

Chrysler is due to close two of its assembly plants for four days, starting May 31.
