Students for literacy at UPEI

A new organization at UPEI is proving that university students can find time to help in the community, even though they are busy with studies and part-time jobs to pay their tuition and expenses. Students for Literacy @ UPEI has joined the over 30 campus programs across Canada, sponsored and supported by Frontier College and working to help Canadians read and write better.

Recently 22 UPEI students attended a two-day training session with Frontier College facilitators, and now those students are fanning out across Charlottetown to put their training into practice. They are helping with seniors at the Garden Home, working with students in elementary schools who need homework help, and running read for fun reading circles and reading tents in several locations. While many students are studying in the education faculty, there are business, science, nursing and arts students participating in the program.

Future plans for Students for Literacy @ U.P.E.I. include recruiting more tutors, seeking other community locations for their services, and helping Frontier College celebrate its 100th anniversary in 1999.

For further information on Students for Literacy @ UPEI, contact any of the Student Executive: Rachel Morrell, Catherine MacLean, Sarah Rigley or Jennifer LaRosa at sflupei@hotmail.com
