

MISS RAYMOND'S TRIALS.

Old Mr. Raymond was dead and buried; and the world had got tired of canvassing the sad circumstance of his failure and death. So we all pass away and are forgotten!

And Kate Raymond was forgotten, too, as she sat by herself in the lonely room with her black dress and her pale cheeks, and the unshed tears making her poor eyes heavy!

People had pitied her at first, but they took it for granted she would do 'something' at all events it was none of their business.

'Well, my dear, have you made up your mind?'

Kate was securing the black rosettes on her simple crape bonnet, with a sigh for every stitch, as old Dr. Smith came creaking into the room and sat down beside her.

Kate looking up through the gathering tears.

'Doctor, I want your advice. Tell me what I had better do?'

'Advice, eh? Well, it isn't easy to advise under some circumstances, child. The only two places that seem at all eligible to me are Madame Bellair's and the situation as companion to old Miss Beverly.'

'I should be more independent as show-woman for Madame Bellair,' said Kate.

'More independent, possibly; but you would have to work twice as hard for just half the—'

'The wages. Don't be afraid of offending my ears with plain truths, doctor,' said Kate.

'Well, wages, then. I should advise you to go to Miss Beverly, my dear, if you can be sure of patience and self control.'

'I am not the wild, impetuous girl I once was; I can be patient now, doctor.'

'It's a lesson we all have to learn, my dear,' said the old man. 'Well, shall I tell Miss Beverly to expect you?'

'When?'

'Say to-morrow?'

'Yes, but doctor—'

'Well?'

'How many members are there in Miss Beverly's family?'

'Only herself and a fussy old bachelor brother—ten times as old maidish as she is herself.'

Kate smiled, a little absently.

'There used to be—a nephew—'

'Yes, I know, Charles Beverly; but he went to Australia a year ago. At ten to-morrow, then, dear, I will call for you.'

Dr. Smith creaked away in those noisy boots of his, and Kate Raymond went up stairs to pack her trunk, and think.

So Charles Beverly was in Australia! She had known that before; yet somehow she wanted the doctor's testimony to make assurance doubly sure. She was glad; yes, upon the whole, she was very glad. She knew that she had treated the honest, loving young fellow like a selfish, heartless coquette, she knew she had half broken his fond, faithful heart with her airs, and graces, and false smiles once upon a time.

'I should have been ashamed to look him in the face,' she pondered. 'I am glad his aunt knows nothing about it.'

And she sighed softly, to think how entirely and radically her whole nature had been changed in the bitter school of adversity.

'I am meeker and quieter now,' she thought. 'I should not throw the jewel of his love from me a second time; but he does not know it—no, nor ever will. A woman can only sit and think. What a blessing we have but one life to live! Perhaps in the next world we may correct the errors of this. Heigho!'

At ten o'clock, precisely the next day Smith's carriage came to the door for Miss Raymond and her trunk.

'Keep up good courage, my dear,' said the kind-hearted old man. Miss Beverly is rather trying, they say; but she has a heart in spite of her sixty years and her old maidenhood, and you will work your way down to it after a while.'

Kate hoped so; but she could not help feeling a little discouraged when Dr. Smith had left her alone in the darkened room, with a pair of green spectacles glaring at her from one corner, and a pair of blue spectacles from the other.

'Shut the door, if you please young Miss,' croaked the blue spectacles; 'drafts are very bad for my sister's asthma.'

'And put a few coals on the fire, Miss Raymond, if that's your name,' squeaked the green spectacles; 'the temperature is also getting too low for my brother's rheumatism.'

Kate obeyed. It was well for her they had given her something to do, else she must certainly have burst out crying.

The first day as 'companion' was ineffably wearisome. Patiently she trudged up and down stairs, with the macaw's cage, and the squirrel's house, and the spaniel's basket, and Miss Beverly's gruel, and the old bachelor's slippers; meekly she listened to directions, and receipts, and harangues without end, until her head ached and her feet smarted and her little hands tingled with unwooned exertion.

'And now,' said Miss Beverly, just as Kate was looking forward to the refreshing possibility of a little while to herself—possibly delightful ten or fifteen minutes slumber—'You may get Professor Drowsyhead's essays from the top shelf in the library and read me to sleep.'

'Yes ma'am,' said Kate, feebly.

'And if you should happen to hear me snore, you may read on just the same. It would wake me at once if you were to stop.'

And Kate obeying orders, read herself nearly into a congestion of the lungs.

August Flower.

The immense sale and great popularity of Green's August Flower in all towns and villages in the civilized world has caused many imitators to adopt similar names, expecting to reap a harvest for themselves at the expense of the afflicted. This medicine was introduced in 1868, and for the cure of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, with their effects, such as Sour Stomach, Sickheadache, Indigestion, Palpitation of the Heart, vertigo, etc., etc., it never has failed to our knowledge. Three doses will relieve any case of Dyspepsia. Two million bottles sold last year. Price 75 cents. Samples 10 cents.

LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY.

ANALYTICAL SANITARY INSTITUTION.

54, Holborn-viaduct, E. C., London, Aug. 18, 1879

REPORT ON THE LORNE HIGHLAND WHISKY:

'We have visited the bottling stores of Greenlees Brothers, and have selected from the vats, samples of their Lorne Highland Whisky, and have subjected them to careful examination and analysis. The samples were very fragrant, mellow, and of pleasant flavor, and possessed all the characteristics of pure and well-matured Scotch Whisky of the first quality.'
