Children Cry for Fletcher's CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Laby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. SAILING Chapter 70

Pan was so busy that week that she had little time to indulge in too many thoughts, about herself or the state of affairs she thought existed between Gloria, George and Santley.

"I'm awfully excited over meeting Mr. Collins," she said once to Gloria. "After seeing his miniature and that large photograph you have and hearing so much about him, I almost feel I know him."

"Santley's the adorable sort that you feel you've known all your life after five minutes talk with him," Gloria said enthusiastically.

"He's serious, he never knows what to make of my wild tantrums and mad enthusiasms," he just sits with a patient amused grin and waits until I return to normal. But he's so genial—well, perhaps that's why he's such a success. He seems so dependable."

"Yes, I think that's the best quality a man can have," Pan pondered. "I liked that so about Morion. I was wrong of course, but I don't know if there is George dependable? I don't think so."

"He is," and Gloria's voice was all enthusiasm again. "He's the best friend I've had—except perhaps Santley. Santley never had the numbers of chances to be a good friend. George has, somehow," always lived around the corner from me."

So if Pan thought she could gain any information about the state of Gloria's feelings she learned nothing. Gloria was equally enthusiastic about both men.

When they reached the dock, finally with 20 minutes to make the boat, Gloria was in a state of collapse. There had been so many details of her business to wind up, so many interviews with this new and important client—who was down to see them with a basket of roses in one hand and a thick letter of last minute instructions in the other—so many parties Gloria had to attend, that the night before sailing she never went to bed at all.

And Pan had to close up the house, send off the maid, who left a day ahead, so they picniced from canned soups and delicatessen things in the kitchen, as they had when Pan first arrived. Then there was Frankie and Frankie's clothes and last minute shopping for needfuls and Gloria insisting on stopping for medicines for Frankie "in case" on the way to the boat and the hunt for tickets in the suitcase in the taxi, and the fact that Gloria's watch had stopped and they were half an hour late, so Pan herself was ready to drop when they were safely on the deck.

"I've been worried to death," George remarked. "I should know by this time that Gloria never misses a train, or a boat, but she always makes it by a hair's breadth and get your lungs full of sea air before we strike rough water, then you won't be ill."

But Pan found that some are born to be sea sick and some are not. She was not, and Gloria was in such a state of collapse that she had to stay in her cabin anyway for three days. Frankie was just comfortable enough to prefer lying in a deck chair until a child with the palest of blue eyes and the palest of flaxen hair coaxed him away to forget his troubles. After that the two boys were constantly playing.

"You're going to take this trip as a rest cure," George said, tucking
