GERMANS WORSTED IN FIERCE AIR FIGHTING

By Arthur S. Draper

LONDON, May 28.—The attack by German aviators on a British hospital camp emphasizes the fierceness of the aerial fighting in France, where, out of sheer desperation, the Germans have committed crimes as black as any they have been guilty of in this brutal war. There is no longer any doubt but what the Allies are clearly superior to the Germans in the air. Each day this advantage is growing, one in which the American aviators share.

At no period of the war has either side enjoyed such an advantage in the air as that held at present by the American, French and British forces.

Germans Active

It is true that the German flyers are exceedingly active and daring. But harder than ever and they are throwing aside all pretence of following the code of warfare.

They know that in the big push they will be at a considerable disadvantage unless they can thin out the flocks of allied airmen who hover over their area day and night. What is happening at sea is being repeated in the air. The part that manufacturers of war munitions are playing in the struggle is being demonstrated daily. Great as Germany's military organization is, the recent happenings on land and sea show that the manufacturing genius of America, France and Britain exceeds that of the German.

No leader can estimate the value of bombing. It may be that this great weapon will revolutionize the whole system of land fighting and prove a decisive factor in ending the war.

Huns Outclassed

Even now the Allies are bombing the enemy's lines of communication so that Ludendorff's plans are being knocked away. The Germans are striving desperately to increase their output, but they are deceiving their men

A story from up in the country in Ontario, where daylight saving is none too popular, has reached the Toronto Star. A Scotch Presbyterian farmer meeting a friend on the road, enquired of him the time. "It's half-past nine," was the reply. "Aye," said the other, "but is that God's time or is it Borden's time?"

"MY IRISH CINDERELLA"

There is something unique and quaint about "My Irish Cinderella" which gives the play of that name a certain distinction. Peggy McNeil is a little Irish girl, whose parents died when she was quite small, and when the play opens we find her in the poor house.

She is taken to London as the supposed grand daughter of Lord Lonsdale, and while here she meets Clifford Morgan, a young American aviator in the service of the Allies. She falls in love with him at sight, but it would be robbing one of half the pleasure if the whole story were told here. There is enough comedy in the piece to afford a hearty laugh now and then, and in fact there is nothing missing that could make the show more effective than it is.

Miss Daisy Carleton in the role of Peggy presents a character drawing that is perfect. She is a remarkably clever dancer and during the action of the play has several real song hits.

A big scenic production is carried and an excellent company of players is promised by the management.

"My Irish Cinderella" will be at the attraction at the Prince Edward Theatre next Wednesday and Thursday, June 5th and 6th. 7039.

TWO FISHERMEN LOST THEIR LIVES

PORT HAWKESBURY, May 28.—The schooner Agnes D. McGlashen, came into port with her flag at half mast, and reported the loss of two men last Tuesday. George Crouse and Willis Tanner. They were attending trawls and not returning in time, search was made. Their dory was found bottom up.

Still There

"Still there" thank God above it's gallant sons. Our Union Jack is flying proudly free. The utmost efforts of the desperate Huns. Could not tear down that flag of Liberty.

They could not tear it down, or smirch it's fame. Because great hearted lads refused to break. Out-gunned, out-numbered, but oh! God how game! Were those young Britons for that Banner's sake.

The gray-clad hordes came on by day and night. In surried waves that seemed an endless sea. But 'gainst the dauntless soul of Britain's might. They dashed and broke in stark impotency.

"Still there" thank God amid the battle's roar. The emblem of our Empire flying free. Shot-perced and torn by storm of war. It ne'er has waved as gloriously.

And those who guard it in the present fight. Will keep it there until the Hun's have gone. From friendly lands defeated by the Right. And all the world looks up to greet the dawn.

Floor-walker (to man who seems undecided which way to go)—"Are you looking for something?" Party addressed—"No, sir. I've lost my wife."

VALCARTIER CAMP WILL OPEN JUNE 1

MONTREAL, May 28.—Colonel Maynard Rogers, commandant of the Valcartier Camp was in the city over the week-end making arrangements for the opening of the camp and for his staff there under the G. O. C. at Quebec. The camp will open officially on Saturday, June 1, but it is expected that the troops will not be moved there before Monday, June 3. Despite the numerous drafts that have been sent overseas there are still 3,423 soldiers in khaki in this district but next week will see a scattering of these forces with the depot units going to Valcartier, the batteries to Petawawa and the engineering under canvas at St. John's, Quebec.
