along with ingenuity in the mere mechanics of daily existence.
"We still have much to find out, but already we can tell that the Sumerian had a well developed moral sense, for his time. The tablets show that he was moving advantly toward a higher concept of society, of the administration of law, of individual responsibility.
"One tablet, for instance, records a hymn to the goddess Nanshe, showing her as the oldest known goddess of justice interested in the social and moral welfare of human beings. Nanshe was a 'divine' symbol of transition—from the old concept that man was made for understanding service to the gods to a newer idea that the gods were interested in the welfare of man."
Yet another clay document, Dr McCown said, "carries the advice of a farmer to his son on what when and how to plant. You might call this the oldest agricultural bulletin known to man when this is fully translated we shall know how well the father advised." The joint expedition will start its second full season in the field in October, 1951.

TURKISH NATIONAL
HERO BURIED

By EDWIN B. GREENWALD
ISTANBUL, Turkey, April 15—
(AP) — Turkey's national hero Marshal Fevzi Cakmak, was buried this week in a pageant of mourning unparalleled here since that at the death of the late President Kamal Ataturk in 1938.
A touching tribute was added by a group of admirers who seized the Marshal's coffin and bore it at the head of the funeral procession of 50,000 on the 10-mile march to the burial ground near the Golden Horn.
Another group hoisted the priest who had conducted the funeral services and carried him along behind the Marshal's body.
Approximately 500,000 persons lined the route.
Government officials had arranged for a gun carriage to take Cakmak's body from the Beyazit Yevazit mosque to the cemetery, but they made no effort to stop the citizens from taking the coffin.
There was no evidence of any new disturbances such as the riots which spread over the city yesterday in protest against what many felt was a lack of official consideration following the Marshal's death April 10.
Scores of demonstrators wound up in jail as a result of disturbances last night.
Cakmak, who helped drive the Greeks from Turkey during Ataturk's revolution, was one of the great heroes of modern Turkey. He stepped into politics four years ago and within two years he was leader of the opposition party and a bitter foe of President Ismet Inonu's Government.
Although no day of mourning was proclaimed, all business in Is-tambul came to a standstill. Shops, theatres and bars were closed. All flights flew at half-mast.

REGENT THEATRE BLDG.
Summer St., Summerside

Easter Sunday weather was chilly but sunny and southern Ontario residents trooped out to show off Easter finery. Pet duck was taken for a walk on Summerside's boardwalk by Faye Arnold. Duck and Faye drew plenty of attention from onlookers. Bright sunshine helped combat chilly breezes from Lake Ontario. Photographers, both amateur and professional, had ideal conditions for picture taking.
