PEPSODENT gives you the WHITEST teeth

The Truth About Tooth Decay

Science has proved that much of the decay that makes cavities is caused by acid-producing bacteria... formed by tiny food particles which remain on the teeth after eating.

To prevent acid-producing bacteria from attacking the teeth, keep your teeth clean by brushing them immediately after meals.

Pepsodent with Irium gives you the greatest cleansing action you can get. Thus the surest way to fight tooth decay is to use Pepsodent immediately after eating. Pepsodent gives you the cleanest teeth and when teeth are cleanest they are safest from decay.

The Golden Girl

By AGNES LOUISE PROVOST AND LADROCK BLACK

GRANTHAM AND HYDE DETECTIVE AGENCY

She looked quickly up and down the corridor and went in. She would do something for Jack Moreland in spite of herself.

At a conspicuously expensive hotel Frances Payne sat at a little table and let her composed glance drift around the crowded room. Wayne Gorham sat opposite her. She was not particularly anxious to be friendly with Gorham, but the broker had been useful, and just now she was not in a position to offend him.

For Mrs. Payne, hard pushed by creditors and unpleasantly short of funds, had taken the old roost of the financially straitened. She had speculated, Gorham had been extremely accommodating in the matter of carrying her account, but she was unpleasantly aware that the debt side was increasing rapidly.

Therefore she accepted the broker's attention for the present at least, although she had coolly decided to drop him when her financial obligations were settled. She turned to him with a lazy smile.

"Did I tell you I have become a business woman? I am playing chaperon to a young heiress, immensely rich and very charming. Wish me good luck in my first venture."

"With all my heart." He warmed to a noticeable interest, as she had meant that he should. "Who is the lucky girl?"

"Her name is Gloria Staunton," Gorham put his cup down carefully. Not a muscle of his face betrayed more than a polite interest.

"Rather an unusual name. I met a Miss Staunton once—purely in a business way. I wonder if she might be the same one?"

Their eyes met across the little table, cool, wary, fencing for advantage. Frances Payne, probing delicately to find if he remembered Gloria Staunton as the unknown girl at Beechwood, could have no idea that his mind's eye saw little writing room in a quiet hotel and a girl with a still, frozen intensity in her eyes as a boy with a little tray passed, calling out in a nasal chant: "Mrs. Moreland! Telegram for Mrs. Moreland!"

"It would be most interesting if she was," she said coolly. "I shall have to introduce you, which is nice of me, for she is disconcertingly pretty. After five! I really must go."

"I wonder why I did it?" It was a question which Jack Moreland had put to himself more than once in the first few weeks of his self-imposed exile in a roaring, soot-laden young city of the middle west. Not why he had married Gloria—that motive was clear enough, the gallant chance that some day he could make her love him, but that chance had gone glimmering. What he grimly questioned was why he, with a host of agreeable friends, with fastidious tastes and a comfortable competence assured him, should leave these things and stay in this ugly little city through broiling summer months as a grimy laborer in an automobile factory.

A girl had taunted him with his uselessness, but he had friends in plenty who could place him in the way of advancement in mahogany offices, or procure for him some pleasant, harmless sinecure where social graces would be an asset. Yet he had taken a "job" in a garage where there was no possible chance to rise, and he had stuck to it until that chance meeting with Gloria had sent him far afield.

The knowledge of her lavish wealth had brought only an impatient disgust at his own ineptitude, and the sight of her in her dainty aloofness had filled him with a primitive desire to sweep her off her feet and carry her away with him in that fleet racing car, daring her to keep longer from the world the fact that she was his lawful wife. Instead of that he had kissed her against her will, had treated her with savage rudeness and left her to think what she would of him.

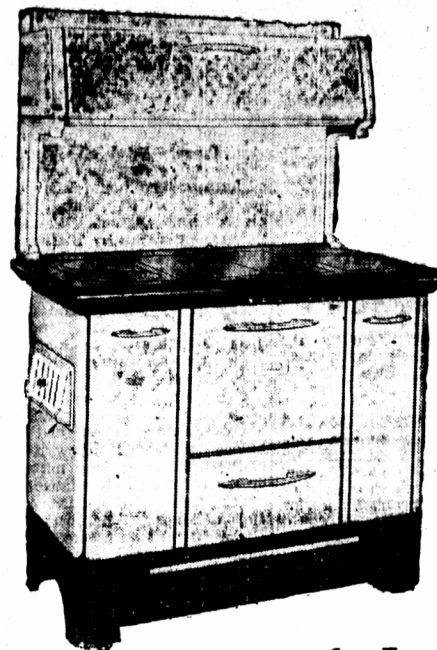

And then he had left the work he had taken to please her and had come to this city of factories, still working and still sticking to cars. It seemed the only thing he could do, at least without getting his friends to prop him.

At the end of the third week he made a discovery. His present job was the only thing he wanted to go! Motors had always been to him living, sentient things. He had heard nothing of Gloria's amazing change of fortune. One of the maids appeared in the door. "Mr. Parsons," she announced. To be continued
