

GOOD MORNING, DEAR PEOPLE!

Good morning! I've just been bathed and powdered and I'm as fresh as a rose. How do you like my two downstairs "toofins" and, wonderful news, I'll soon have two up-stairs. They tell me I keep everyone around me very busy — but no one seems to mind. Well bye-bye, it's been nice talking to you.

ELLEN'S DIARY

True Work Is Sacred — Something Divine In It

R. L. Stevenson said, "All who have meant good work with their whole hearts, have done good work, although they may die before they have time to sign it. And another has declared, "No good work is ever lost. Many laborers must be content to sow; others will come to reap the harvest" while Carlyle reminds us that "all true work is sacred; in all true work, were it but true hand-labor, there is something of divineness." Then blest are they who in their everyday work, great and lesser, can glimpse that aura of divineness which enhances the commonplace task and makes every turn of hand, each familiar scene into something truly satisfying and good. The housewives busy with their numberless duties and cares tiring and often unnoticed — these come to mind now as the day and week go to rest. Not we perfect such as we, since our busiest days and most demanding, have been pretty well left behind. But those women and mothers

Or maybe tucking up the children, kin now in their sweetness to the angels that keep a silent watch through the stilly hours above their young beds; or perchance picking up the out-of-place items in that seemingly endless chore which is a part of a woman's destiny before they lay out the clean garments for the youngsters' tomorrow. These must be able to catch the reflected light of Heaven in every act performed in their often tedious round. And those of the sisterhood whose children are older, the motherly duties changed somewhat, though they still have the sometimes monotonous tasks of the house-keeping to do: the over and over, repeated chores, "the little acts of unrequited love" which contribute so much to the order and comfort of the home — may
