Communist Enforced Silence Seals Frontiers Of Tibet

By CONRAD FINK

NEW DELHI (AP)—Tibet, the "forbidden land" beyond the Himalayas, is becoming more mysterious than ever.

A strange, Communist - enforced silence has settled over Tibet's frontiers with the outside world.

Chinese Communist border guards with guns at the ready now stand where caravans once wound through mountain passes to India, Nepal, Sikkim or Bhutan.

The refugee flow out of Tibet, which once numbered in the thousands, now is a mere trickle. Much of the information used by military intelligence groups and diplomats is two or three years old.

What has life been like deep inside Tibet since the Chinese took over in 1951? Is Tibetan culture being wiped out, as the exiled Dalai Lama charges? Are the Chinese practicing "genocide," as the god-king says?

No one—not even the Dalai Lama himself—can know the full picture.

Fragmentary reports reaching New Delhi, however, shed a little light on three important points:

REBELS SUPPRESSED

1. Resistance to the Chinese rule appears to have been wiped out, even in the southeastern Chamdo area where rebel Kampa tribesmen put up a good fight for several years.

2. There seems to be some truth in Chinese claims of rapid progress in developing Tibetan agriculture, although no definite information is available on whether the Chinese are introducing the commune system.

3. Industrialization is a secondary goal, but prospecting teams have spread out in search of coal and iron ore and some factories have been built.

The Chinese puppet ruler in Tibet is the Panchen Lama, a 28-year-old spiritual leader who went over to the Communists long ago. He has been pushed into the political vacuum left when the Dalai Lama fled to India in 1959.

Estimates of the number of Chinese troops behind the Panchen Lama run upwards from 300,000.

The Chinese joint military-civil administration has divided Tibet into four regons.

72 DISTRICTS

These regons are further broken down into 72 districts for easy — and absolute — Communist control from the capital of Lhasa.

This rigid setup is known as the "regional autonomous government of the Tibet region of China," represented by the so-called autonomous council with 61 members.

The council was headed by Chang Kuo Hua, a Chinese general, but there have been reports that he was ousted early this year for pro-Moscow leanings.

The general reorganized land distribution, brought in high-quality seed and thousands of steel plows—an innovation in Tibet.

As a consequence, there are reports of increased yields of wheat, barley and beans.

But little of the increased production seems to be reaching the Tibetans themselves. The few refugees who escape say food rationing is strict and that in some areas near starvation conditions exist.

FOOD SENT TO CHINA

Experts in New Delhi say surplus food is being shipped to China which has had severe food shortages in recent years.

Industrialization is a more serious problem for the Chinese. But by bringing in large teams of technicians and using Tibetan copper, coal and iron ore, the Chinese seem to have made a start.

An ordnance factory is reported producing ammunition at a site about two miles east of Lhasa, near the famous Sera Buddhist monastery.

The Chinese apparently have made a strong effort to assimilate Tibetan youth into the Communist scheme of things.
