INTERPRETING THE ADVERSARY'S PLAY

It is a defender's duty, of course, to try to figure out why a sound declarer did or did not do this or that, and to conduct the defense accordingly. Sometimes, however, this is a difficult process. Consider in duplicate match.

Neither side vulnerable.
Match-point duplicate.

♣ W

This was the bidding at many of the tables:

South	West	North	East
1♦	Dble.	4♦	4♠
5♦	Dble.	Pass	Pass

In at least one case, West opened his singleton trump. South studied the dummy, then he put up the diamond queen and immediately led and passed the club queen. West won and now decided to lay down the spade ace. East did his best to steer the defense by playing his lowest spade, but West was not to be deterred—he continued with the spade jack. This gave South the opportunity to ruff, draw East's trump jack, and then establish his own fifth club for a heart discard from dummy. Consequently, this South went down only one trick, and the 100-point penalty he paid gave him top score on the board.

In the postmortem, West said that he could not believe South had laid himself open to a 500-point penalty by leaving a trump at large and risking a club ruff, when South should have seen clearly that even a 300-point penalty would give him a very good score on the board, since East-West could obviously make at least four spades or hearts.

South, however, had his own ideas on this subject. He pointed out that the immediate club finesse could not possibly cost anything unless one defender had a singleton in the suit; and against this was the fact that if he drew all the trumps immediately, then took the club finesse, it might be East rather than West who had only one trump, and East might be able to signal in hearts, thus clarifying the defense.

SOME NEWS FOR PETER

The news that harmless seems to me the worst of news to you may be.

Mrs. Peter Rabbit sat at the edge of the dear Old Briar-patch. She was looking out across the Green Meadows to the Green Forest. It was very early in the morning, Jolly, round, bright Mr. Sun was just kicking off his rosy blankets in the East. The first jolly little Sunbeams were peeping out at the Black Shadows hurrying back to the Purple Hills. The Green Meadows were no longer green, they were covered with light snow.

Mrs. Peter wore a worried look. Why didn't Peter come home? What was he waiting for? Didn't he know she was worried? Didn't he know that it would soon be too light to take the chance of crossing from the Green Forest to the Old Briar-patch? Why couldn't he be content to stay at home?

At long last she saw him coming. He wasn't hurrying. Now and then he stopped to sit up and look this way and that way to make sure the way was clear. In a way he was being careful. But Mrs. Peter wished he would hurry. The nearer he got the more she wished he would hurry. He didn't. He just hopped along easily. He didn't even hurry when he saw Mrs. Peter just outside the dear Old Briar-patch waiting for him.

"Didn't you see me here waiting for you?" demanded little Mrs. Peter crossly.

"Yes, my dear," replied Peter. "Then why didn't you hurry?" Mrs. Peter wanted to know.

"Why should I have hurried?" asked Peter. "I didn't see any reason to hurry. What is worrying you, my dear?"

"I've some news for you," said Mrs. Peter. She spoke rather shortly.

"I hope it's good news," said Peter.

"Well, it isn't," declared Mrs. Peter. She stamped a foot.

"Then it must be bad news," said Peter. "And I don't like bad news."

"You won't like this news," said Mrs. Peter.

Peter pricked up his long ears and began to look a little worried himself. "If I don't like it, it must be bad news. And the sooner you tell me, the better," said he.

"We have a visitor here in the dear Old Briar-patch," said Mrs. Peter. She looked more worried than ever.

"Well, what of it? We've had visitors before. Who is it this time?" asked Peter.

"It's Jimmy Skunk," said Mrs. Peter.

"You don't say!" exclaimed Peter, and the worried look left his face. "I supposed Jimmy was asleep."

Mrs. Peter looked all around carefully. "He may be," said she. "He said he was going to sleep."

"Jimmy is all right," said Peter. "We've been good friends a long time. As long as we don't bother him, he won't bother us. You ought to know that by this time."

Mrs. Peter nodded. "Of course, I know it," said she. "I wouldn't mind calling Jimmy Skunk just make a call, or even stay the day."

"Isn't that what he is doing?" Peter wanted to know.

"I think he is planning to stay longer than just for the day. I have a feeling that he may be planning to stay the rest of the winter," said Mrs. Peter.

"Oh!" exclaimed Peter. He sounded a little startled. "What makes you think that, my dear?"

"He's in that old house of Grandfather Chuck's, the one in the middle of the old Briar-patch," said Mrs. Peter.

"Do you mean the one we use in very bad weather?" Peter wanted to know.

Mrs. Peter nodded vigorously. "Of course," said she. "What other one would I mean?"

"But perhaps he's only going to use it today," said Peter.

"He said something about using that old house for the rest of the winter," said Mrs. Peter. This was news indeed, and it wasn't good news. Anyway, it didn't seem good news just then. "I hope that isn't so!" said Peter.
