Remedy for Caked Udder.

Following is a remedy for caked udder, well tried and tested, from The Jersey Bulletin. Take one-half pint aqua ammonia, one pint soft water, one or two teaspoonfuls spirits of turpentine, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of fluid extract of belladonna, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of fluid extract of hyptis, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of saturated tincture of camphor. Shake well and apply with all the elbow grease and patience you can muster. Take about a teaspoonful at a time in the hollow of the hand, and gently, but with sufficient pressure, rub it into the skin of the udder until the latter gets dry and quite hot: support yourself by putting the unoccupied hand, with an occasional patting, across the patient's spine. After having treated both sides, in front and rear (the latter as high up as the udder reaches) to doses of liniment, get down under your cow and gently commence kneading the bag, taking the whole and afterwards part of the udder between the opened hands, rolling the former till the formed lumps are crushed, occasionally milking bag empty. Stop use of liniment as soon as coagulation disappears, but keep rubbing and milk often; by all means avoid graining, feed hay only very sparingly, give plenty of water and keep the animal from getting cold.
