Y. W. C. T. U.

Since March 14th, when the last report was given, the membership has increased steadily. It now numbers one hundred. The strength of the Union, however, cannot be reckoned by numbers alone.

The W. C. T. U. and the "Y's" conjointly have rented the building on Grafton Street, formerly known as the old Union Bank, where it is decided to open a lunch room as soon as possible. The Industrial School and Loyal Legion in connection with the W. C. T. U. hold their meetings in the buildings, and the "Y's" have furnished parlors up stairs for the regular meetings of the Society. The rooms, which were completed in time for the second Parlor Meeting (held April 14th), presented a very home-like appearance, and more than one hundred friends passed a very pleasant social evening. During the evening two original papers were read: "What alcohol is good for," and "What alcohol is not good for." It was shown to be necessary in many lines of manufactures, and it was clearly shown, not only that it is not necessary to a healthy human system, but that its action upon the different organs of the body is poisonous.

The regular business meetings are well attended. Interesting discussions have been held upon different subjects, such as woman's suffrage, dress reform, pledges, etc., and the reports of work done in the different departments adopted by the "Y's" have been highly satisfactory.

(Contributed by the W. C. T. U.)

Mrs. Ormiston Chant says, "You pray daily to God that His will may be done on earth, and you spend much effort on behalf of that will being taught to the heathen; but when it comes to making an effort to secure the doing of the will of God in Parliament you call it the mire of politics and things of the world."

One of the latest watchwords of the W. C. T. U. is, "What next?" One of the greatest problems of Christian philantropists has been, "How shall we reach the poor?" Here is one still more difficult to solve. The problem of how to reach the rich. It is comparatively an easy matter to approach the more humble brothers and sisters of toil and want, to endeavor to point out to them the danger and evils of strong drink, and to urge the importance of its banishment from the home. But it is a much more difficult matter to approach the other class of men and women, sometimes termed the better class. The refined and educated women who govern society and whose responsibilities are so far beyond those of that other class of women. Most ladies are ready to admit that drunkenness is a great evil, that it should be prevented, controlled in some way. These would be horrified and perhaps feel insulted, if it was suggested that they were in any way responsible for the sins of intemperance and of impurity. Indignant at the suggestion that their "table was made a snare,"—their evening entertainments to be avoided by those who would escape temptation. Alas that this should be the truth. As a rule there is not much wine at parties, not nearly so much as formerly. While rejoice we that the decanter is abolished, and the dainty treacherous wine-glass, we are pained that the "deceiver" finds its way in a more deceptive form. The young man or woman can decline the glass of wine when proffered openly, but when wine is concealed in the tempting fancy dishes, even in the ever popular ice cream, who is to warn them of the danger? "I can easily refuse to drink wine," said a young man who had recently taken the pledge, "but how can I refuse to eat it when I have no knowledge of its presence?" In some instances it is beyond the woman's power to banish the decanter from her table, however she may wish so to do, but who is responsible for the increasing custom of alcohol in food? Where the necessity of wine at all, when there are harmless flavorings equally palatable. It should be a responsibility as well as a privilege to purge from social life anything that might injure or offend, anything that might, unconsciously to the entertainer, prove a temptation and a snare to those she wishes to make happy by her social entertainment. Who does not know of some young man, who is bringing anxiety to the hearts of those who love him most by the love of drink, which, going into society has helped to foster and to develop; nor is it young men alone who are in danger by this mistaken custom of society. Is there not danger for the other sex? the fair young girl who sips with relish her "claret cup" and partakes so freely of wine flavored ices. Drinking among women has increased so alarmingly in England that there is a loud demand for reform and for the repeal of the "Grocer's license bill." In Canada, thank God, there is no such bill, but there are other causes of alarm, other temptations where least suspected. So-called fashionable society is responsible for a great deal of the evil that is in the world: the evil that is wrought through want of thought. The social entertainment given, with the best intentions on the part of the host and hostess, is not always a safe place for the sons and daughters of Canada. The social atmosphere needs cleansing—leaders of society need awakening. "Who is sufficient for these things?" It is the privilege of rich and refined women, says one, to make an atmosphere in which evil passions can find nothing to feed upon, which shall lift all men who breathe in it to a higher level of life. "The malarial places in social life would disappear before the redeeming influence of purified manhood and womanhood, and all the earth would indeed become a garden of the Lord." This blissful state can only be reached through the rich and the influential members of society, with this idea before us, can we, White Ribbon women, not make greater efforts? Shall we not more earnestly seek to banish wine from the parlor and from the kitchen? Seek to "uphold the law of purity as equally binding upon men and women." To be modest in language, behaviour, conversation and dress, thus aiding others to keep the command, to be "unspotted from the world."

Hope River Notes.

Business of every kind through this part of the country is quiet at present.

Farmers are jobbing around preparatory to plunging into the spring's work, which, to all appearances, will be late this year.

Social gatherings, which so often animate our halls with gay life, have ceased; and those walls which, through the long winter nights, drank in the fiery eloquence of our local orators, are now silent as the tomb.

The singing school which has been under the careful tuition of Mr. Ferguson has ended after a very successful term. Judging by the number of graduates from his class, we must conclude that his abilities as a music teacher are of no mean order. Hope River may well be spoken of as a hothouse of trained vocalists. Even the spring birds sing more modestly than usual, fearing, no doubt, the libelous scar of our numerous critics of song.

The Debating Club has had its period of existence this year, and though the period was short it was indeed very successful. On the last night of the Club a grand concert was given by the members to a crowded hall.

Slight rumblings of politics may at times be indistinctly heard, but as yet they are very far off.

VIDI.

Personal.

The New York Sun of recent date illustrates the very height and depth of American snobbery. It devotes three columns to elaborate descriptions and illustrations of the various clothes worn during the day by the young Earle of Craven, who is shortly to marry a New York girl, beginning with his shirt and ending with his overcoat. Even collars, cuffs and ties are not omitted. The Sun also gives every attention to his lordship's boots.

The death of Edhem Pasha, whom Mr. Disraeli made famous by terming the "Turkish Talleyrand," removes one of the most astute politicians and diplomatists of the Eastern Empire. At first a Christian and later a sincere and deeply-respected Mohammedan, he had for twenty years been Turkish Ambassador at Paris or Vienna, and during the whole of the eventful period when the Czar and the Sultan were fighting that bitter contest which ended in the Treaty of San Stefano, he was Grand Vizier or Prime Minister of Turkey. With the making of that famous agreement, which Lord Beaconsfield subsequently forced Russia to tear up at the Berlin Congress, he retired from office.

Give Up the Work!

Laid Up for Two Years with Chronic Rheumatism.

Cured by Paine's Celery Compound.

HENRY KIMPEL

Let us reason together, ye sufferers from rheumatism. Are you anxious for a cure? Do you wish to banish agony and suffering? If you be honest and value life, read what Mr. Henry Kimpel, of Listowel, Ont., says. Note well his testimony is endorsed by a prominent druggist.

"Thinking it but right that I should let others know what Paine's Celery Compound has done for me, I will endeavor to give you my experience with it. I am a farmer in the Township of Wallace, and three years ago I was terribly afflicted with chronic rheumatism. I became so bad that I was laid up for nearly two years. I went to my doctor in the early stages of my trouble, and he visited me when I could not get out of the house; but he never afforded me any relief. I tried almost every patent medicine but remained as bad as ever. I then heard of your Paine's Celery Compound, and was strongly advised to use it. I bought a bottle and commenced with it, and soon found that I had a medicine that gave me ease and relief from pain. I find that Paine's Celery Compound is doing for me what it promised; and that I will shortly be rid of all trouble. I consider it the most remarkable remedy of the day, and have recommended it to many of my friends who are now praising it highly. It has cured my son, who was a terrible dyspeptic. I cheerfully give you this letter to use as you see fit; and will also send my photo. Trusting that my testimony may benefit others, I am, dear sir, yours truly,

HENRY KIMPEL."

In regard to the above, Mr. John Livingstone, the popular druggist of Listowel, writes as follows:

"I have known Mr. Kimpel for a number of years. He had been doctoring for a long time, with but little benefit, until he used Paine's Celery Compound, which cured him right away. He is loud in its praise."
